

DEATH CLAIMS WAYNE B. WHEELER

MACREADY ALTITUDE RECORD MAY STAND YOUNG HILL DENIES MATRICIDE

RECORD MAY STAND

Discovery That Title Holder Forged Barograph Sheet, Disqualifies Him—McCook Field Flight May Be Record

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—Lieutenant John A. Macready, United States army ace who flew to an altitude of 38,704 feet at McCook Field, Dayton, Ohio, on January 29, 1926, likely will be credited with the world record for that achievement, it was learned in aviation circles here today following reports from Paris that Jean Callizo, the present title holder had been disqualified for forging a barograph sheet on his record making flight.

Callizo, a French civilian pilot, records committee, testified to an altitude of only 14,764 feet. Callizo's record will be stricken from the official rolls of the International Aeronautic Society, after which, in behalf of the American Aeronautical Association, Macready's record will be forwarded to Paris for consideration by the International Committee.

WHEELER'S DEMISE REMOVES POWERFUL FIGURE AT CAPITAL

Little Man In Gallery Controlled Many Congress Members

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—Wayne B. Wheeler is dead—and Washington attached almost as much importance to his passing today as it would to the removal of some great political party chieftain.

That fact, in itself, constitutes an eloquent tribute to the power and prestige of the little man who for a quarter of a century has been the driving force, the flaming spirit, the master mind of the American prohibition movement. To the politicians of both the Republican and Democratic alike, Wheeler has meant prohibition and prohibition has meant Wheeler. The names have been synonymous in their minds. Probably no man has ever so completely embodied a cause as Wheeler embodied prohibition, and the speculation was kept today as to his successor and the effect his death will have on the national politics of the next decade.

In his little office in the shadow of the capitol, and in an inconspicuous seat in the galleries of congress, the little generalissimo of the prohibition forces kept a close tab on literally hundreds of congressmen and others in official life. He had them card-indexed and pigeon-holed with reference to only one subject, prohibition. Comparatively few dared to defy him openly, for to do so inevitably meant trouble in the next campaign. He had a way of going into a state or a congressional district and unloosing all kinds of political trouble on the head of one who has no "right" with the Anti-Saloon League.

So, year after year, he divided his time between his somewhat dingy little office at the base of Capitol Hill, and the galleries of congress, always watchful, always alert. A nod of his head, a wave of his hand in the gallery, and it was not an unusual sight to see a half a dozen members leave the floor and consult with him in the corridors. Time and again, wet members of congress have caustically called public attention to the little man in the gallery and "denied" his open control over votes on the floor. But Wheeler always grinned sardonically and went blithely ahead with his mission—which was to make America dry. Several times in recent years movements were started to bar him from the galleries, but they always came to nothing. He had too many supporters and too much power for that.

It is little wonder then that the politicians of Capitol Hill were keenly interested today in his success. On every hand today there was heard the question: "Who's going to succeed Wheeler?" There was no mistaking the interest in the answer, or the importance of the matter to those who have depended upon his support in their biennial struggles for re-election.

In the speculation as to his successor today three names were prominently mentioned: Bishop James Cannon, Jr., chairman of the league's campaign committee; Dr. F. Scott McBride, general superintendent of the league; and Dr. E. C. H. Cherrington of Westerville, O., the home of the league.

Whether the mantle of Wheeler will fall to one of these remains to be seen, but irrespective of where it falls the belief was universal among politicians in Washington today that the prohibition movement has lost its greatest driving force.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 6.—Funeral plans were being made here early today for Albert L. Shoppell, 34, Columbus business man who was accidentally shot while practicing shooting with a revolver near Pleasantville. ### MARCUS LOEW IS SUDDENLY TAKEN

MARCUS LOEW

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Marcus Loew, whose name is identified with the motion picture industry around the world, died in his sleep at his palatial home in Glen Cove, L. I., yesterday.

The owner of the nation-wide chain of motion picture and vaudeville theaters had been ill for three months. He first was stricken with pneumonia, and after part recovery he had been seeking to regain his health in travel and medical treatment.

Two weeks ago, accompanied by his physician and nurses, he went to Saratoga Springs, hoping that rest and a course of treatment there would renew his vitality.

Mr. Loew was 55 years old May 7. He was born in New York in the old East Side which has produced so many self-made men. In 1894 he was married to Carrie Rosenheim.

Loew is recognized as the first man to foresee the tremendous future of the motion picture industry and he has been riding at the crest of that industry ever since. At the time of his death he was the president of nearly 100 theatrical corporations.

BONE CAUSES DEATH

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 6.—Funeral services will be held Wednesday for Mrs. Laura Loveless, 50, wife of a Granville physician, who died as a result of shock, when a chicken bone became lodged in her throat, while she was eating salad with several friends.

ZANESVILLE SCHOOL OPENING POSTPONED DUE TO EPIDEMIC

ZANESVILLE, O., Sept. 6.—Zanesville city schools, scheduled to resume today, were ordered to postpone the opening by local health authorities today, as a precaution, after two cases of infantile paralysis, the first in this county, were reported over the week-end. The tentative date of reopening is September 19. Schools at Frazzysburg, near here, were also closed indefinitely, when one case of paralysis developed there. This case is in a family of eight children, who already are under quarantine as the result of another of the children having scarlet fever. The Parkinson district school, near here, also has delayed its opening, and it was indicated all schools in the county probably would postpone re-opening.

ILLINOIS OFFICERS ARRIVE IN SEATTLE TUESDAY FOR YOUTH

Father Offers To Help Boy—Wires Harry To Return

SEATTLE, Wash., Sept. 6.—Officers from LaSalle County, Illinois, were to arrive here today to take charge of Harry R. Hill, 22, who faces trial in Streator, Ill., for the murder of his aged mother, Mrs. Eliza Hill.

The youth was arrested here Saturday night after being trailed across the continent from Streator. Although registered at a hotel here under the name of Jackson, Hill readily admitted his identity. He denied, however, he was guilty of his mother's death, maintaining he had fled because he was "in trouble over some bad checks."

Repeated attempts of officers to wring a confession from him have failed. The youth, despondent since his arrest, was more cheerful today, having received a telegram from his father, Dr. H. C. Hill, stating he was convinced of his innocence and would spend his last dollar to prove it.

"Dad's a brick," smiled young Hill. "I knew he would stick by me."

The father also urged his boy not to resist extradition, but to "come on home and clear your name."

The extradition papers were sent from Illinois by air mail and should be in Governor Hartley's hands at Olympia today. It is believed the governor will honor the requisition papers without question. If no hitch occurs, the prisoner should be back in Streator by the end of the week.

Arrival of the Illinois officers was eagerly awaited here in order to clear up reports that the youth under arrest is not Hill. It was intimated that the prisoner might be a friend of Hill's who sought to hold the attention of police until Hill himself could make good his escape. Capt. Charles Tennant, Seattle chief of detectives, says he is positive the young man in the city jail is Hill.

Adolph Holler, 62, husband of the dead woman, the only survivor of the accident, is still confined in Essey Hospital, recovering from serious injuries, but gradual improvement is being noted in his condition.

Coroner F. M. Chambliss, who has been conducting an inquiry into the tragedy, predicted Tuesday the possibility that he would hold an inquest the latter part of this week or early next week, to obtain a clear explanation of the crash from a number of eye witnesses.

Rev. Albert Schatzman, pastor of the church, will conduct the funeral, which will be held at the Episcopal Church, from which Wheeler's wife was buried two weeks ago, following her tragic death in the explosion of an oil stove at their Michigan summer home.

MRS. ANNA NEWTON

Triple funeral services will be held in Dayton for three victims of the Jamestown Pike crossing tragedy Sunday that claimed four victims when a passenger flyer struck an automobile. Adolph Holler, left, above, is in Essey Hospital here recovering from injuries sustained in the accident. His wife, Mrs. Margaret Snider, Frank J. Snider and Mrs. Anna Newton, the last three sisters and brother, were instantly killed.

The toll of lives taken by the pistol of Tony De Capua, who Saturday night, in a sudden fit of insanity, perpetrated the most shocking orgy of murder this city has ever known, reached eight today when Fred Gutwisky, 53, died in a hospital.

Gutwisky had no part in the affair, but was struck by a stray bullet, during the gun battle between De Capua and police. A few minutes before, De Capua, raved by unemployment and poverty, had shot to death his wife, four children and two small grandchildren, and seriously wounded his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Gladys De Capua.

As he started to reload the pistol, a police squad wagon drew up in front of the house and De Capua rushed into the front yard and met the officers. Patrol Driver Leo Tyrrell was shot in the leg and at least two spectators wounded before De Capua was himself shot in the abdomen and captured.

Police reported that De Capua made an attempt to escape from city hospital last night. A guard is maintained in his room. He refuses to answer questions, is extremely sullen and apparently demented, according to police.

Mrs. Gladys De Capua, the daughter-in-law, whose two infant children were murdered, is still in a serious condition from the wounds she sustained.

DRY LEADERS MOURN PASSING OF FAMOUS PROHIBITION HEAD

Complications Cause Demise—Death Came Suddenly

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., Sept. 6.—The ranks of reformers and the world at large today mourned the death of a figure unique in the history of the country, a man credited with being the moving force behind the passage of the most vehemently-discussed amendment ever added to the constitution of the United States. He was Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel and so-called generalissimo of the Anti-Saloon League, who died at a sanitarium here late yesterday afternoon from a complication of kidney trouble and heart disease.

Wheeler's body, which was taken to a local undertaking establishment, was to be removed to Columbus, Ohio, by his son and a friend, Dr. Howard Hyde, later in the day. It was understood that Wheeler's body would be laid to rest near that of his wife in the family burial plot in Columbus, O. Mrs. Wheeler died but a few weeks ago as the result of burns received in the explosion of an oil burner at Wheeler's home in Little Pointe, Mich.

Proponents of the famous dry leader say that few individual personages attracted to themselves such universal recognition through conscientious adherence to principles and convictions as Wayne B. Wheeler. For more than thirty years, he has worked for the passage of a national law which would free the nation from what he termed the "grip" of intoxicating liquors, and since the last decade of the nineteenth century, all his energies had been expended toward that end.

Worked for Dry Law. From what appeared to be a weak, almost chimerical quasi-political doctrine, Wheeler's creed of bone-dry legislation assumed sizable proportions in the early years of the twentieth century, and the Anti-Saloon League became a force that politics realized would have to be reckoned with. When, in 1918, the eighteenth amendment was passed by the congress of the United States, Wheeler's prognostications and hopes had been realized, and he soon came to hold the distinction of being the man who had seen a nation accept as law, the doctrine of his life.

Wheeler was born on November 10, 1869, on a small farm in Brookfield, O. It was during his boyhood on this farm, he told reporters a short time before his death, that Wheeler had first incited in his mind an aversion to liquor. The occasion was when a drunk farmhand rammed a pitchfork in young Wheeler's leg. He said the astounding inefficiency and carelessness of the farmhand, a good hay-tosser when sober, brought a message to him to be felt through the length and breadth of the world.

Attended Oberlin. Wheeler received his education at Oberlin College in Ohio. While a student there, he was brought to the attention of the Rev. Dr. Howard H. Russell, one of the founders of the Anti-Saloon League, who was in search of an assistant. Dr. Russell found the youth in the janitor's quarters of the college.

ACCOMPLICE OF ALLEGED AUTO THIEF HELD; HAD MASTER KEY

With the arrest of Clarence Burden, 17, this city, by Patrolman Charles Thompson Tuesday morning, police are convinced a long series of recent automobile thefts has been solved.

Burden maintains his innocence but an ignition key, similar to a master key, was found in his possession, which will operate the ignition on Chevrolets and Stars of 1924, 1925 and 1926 models.

A majority of auto thefts in the last few months has been of automobiles of these two makes, police say.

Burden's arrest resulted from the confession of Harold Miller, 16, Trumbull St., under arrest at Police Headquarters, who implicated Burden as his companion in the theft of at least two automobiles from Xenia and Wilmington residents.

Both youths are being held at Police Headquarters but their cases will probably be transferred to Juvenile Court as both are under age.

Police Chief Ben South, Wilmington, and a man named Smith whose car Miller admitted having stolen during the Clinton County Fair, were to come to Xenia Tuesday to identify both boys if possible.

MEDICAL MISSIONARY HEARD AT BEAVER GRADE SCHOOL REUNION

Japan is advancing rapidly along modern lines in many ways more rapidly than the United States, Dr. William Ankney, recently returned from that country told visitors at the eighteenth annual reunion of former pupils and teachers of the old Beaver graded school, Monday at Beaver Reformed Church on the Dayton and Xenia Pike.

Dr. Ankney, a medical missionary to China under the Reformed Church, was obliged to leave that country during the recent revolution, and went to Japan where he visited his brother, the Rev. Alfred Ankney, a missionary there. He then came on here and is the guest of his father, Mr. Horace Ankney of the Dayton Pike. He gave a short history of the Chinese revolutions. Dr. Ankney also recited a poem he learned when he was a pupil of Mrs. Ernest Bradford in the Pleasant View school, Beaver Creek Twp.

W. P. Kershner of Columbus, who is connected with the state teachers insurance bureau, gave an address in which he urged a return to the old classical education. Too much attention is being paid nowadays, the speaker said, to business education, and not enough to education of the pupil for his leisure time.

Mr. Brown, a Dayton attorney, also gave an address, in which he paid a tribute to the foundations of education that were laid in Beaver Creek Twp., as evidenced he said, by the solid structure that exists today.

The program which followed the picnic dinner, was opened by the singing of two old hymns under the leadership of the Rev. Arthur Leaming, pastor of Beaver Church. The welcome address was given by Mrs. P. H. Flynn. Miss Mary Corwin of Cincinnati, a former pupil, read an original poem, "A Tropical Tangle."

Mrs. Orpha Dillingham of this city and her sister, Mrs. Newton Ledbetter, both former pupils, sang a duet "Grandmother's Advice," and Mrs. Dillingham recited a poem "Aunt Jemima's Plaster." A chorus composed of older pupils sang old songs. Albert Ankney, Sr., recited a short poem in Latin, and one of Edgar Guest's poems.

Mrs. Ernest Bradford was re-elected president of the reunion association; E. H. Snyder of Dayton, vice president; Miss Rachel Ankney, corresponding secretary, Horace Ankney, Jr., recording secretary, and Mrs. J. A. Piper, Xenia, treasurer.

One hundred participated in the picnic dinner at noon, and about thirty more came for the afternoon program in the church auditorium.

His burial took place in Denver.

DR. GALLOWAY IS SPEAKER AT UNVEILING OF MONUMENTS

The pioneer honored was William Sloan, who followed the army of Wayne when he was thirteen years old, fought through the Revolutionary war, and later was the first settler in Clermont and Brown Counties.

Both monuments and their sites will probably be soon delivered over to the direction of the Ohio State Archeological Society, whose president, Arthur Johnson of Columbus, was a speaker at the exercises. A deed to the site of the original Methodist Church of the county, adjoining the cemetery where Sloan is buried, was presented to the society to be maintained as a park by Mayor Harry Hill and Mrs. Hill of Milford, who recently purchased the 200 acre farm on which the property lies.

The monument marking the site of the old Indian trail, was donated by the citizens of Edenton, assisted by the Daughters of the American Revolution at Blanchester. The monument, a miniature obelisk, is about ten feet in height, and is made of gray river stone. It was designed and constructed by the men of Edenton. The monument to William Sloan was donated by Dr. W. A. Galloway of this city, historian and authority on early Indian and pioneer lore, was the principal speaker at exercises celebrating the unveiling of monuments to a famous pioneer and a famous site, at Edenton, Clermont County, Monday.

The site marked was the intersection of the Edenton Pike with the early Indian trail, later known as the Bullskin Pike, and afterward the Xenia state road, over which the colonization of a great part of the middle west was accomplished.

SPRINGFIELD AUTO DRIVER IS INJURED

Sustaining cuts about the body and deep gashes in the head, Robert Coleman, 25, 18 1/2 S. Center St., Springfield, was painfully injured at 8:30 o'clock Saturday night when his automobile turned over three times at the junction of the Springfield and Clinton Pikes at the village limits of Yellow Springs.

The automobile, a coach, was wrecked in the crash. The car was reported to be owned by Carl Greiner, Springfield. The accident resulted, it was said, when Coleman became blinded by the lights of an approaching auto.

WHAT'S THE USE?

Recent tragedies of the air have excited the sympathy and horror of the world, but automobile casualties, mounting to appalling numbers, attract scarcely a momentary interest. Day by day the list grows. Sunday's total in Greene County alone was four lives.

It is to be expected that in experimental adventuring in the new field of aviation considerable numbers of pioneer leaders should die—there are so many unknown elements of risk in such enterprise, so much that remains to be done before reasonable security may be assured. But this is not the case with the automobile. This method of transportation per se is as safe as that by the old-fashioned horse-drawn vehicle. The machines are substantial, the rules for their direction and control plain and simple. There is no reason for collisions, for running down pedestrians, for tragedies at railway crossings. These accidents occur, nine times in ten, because of the fault of the drivers. Men have not ceased taking chances, they have not ceased being careless, they fatuously remain ignorant of many things they should know in connection with driving these machines; and so the tragedies mount. Daily the people are admonished, warned and instructed by newspapers, by dealers, by public organizations, but they refuse to heed—they die until the annual toll amounts to more than twenty thousand, with an injured list running into the hundreds of thousands.

For a number of weeks the Middle West has been disturbed and alarmed by a visitation of infantile paralysis; every precaution promptly was taken; professional advice to the public was comprehensive and adequate; parents became careful and watchful; apprehension was widely acute and everybody on the qui vive to do all possible to check the dangerous scourge. The deaths from this cause have been negligible, but with people, hosts of little children among them, dying daily in automobile accidents, the threat of the spread of this disease brought the public to the extreme degree of precautionary rational defensiveness. And yet, daily, thousands of them continue to court the kiss of oblivion as they go their ways on the comfortable cushions of the modern chariot of Thanatos!

Little Old New York

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Panorama of New York at 11 o'clock at night, the theater closing hour! Subway trains are running faster and the stations are becoming more and more crowded, until they reach a peak at 11:30. Sidewalks in the theatrical district are as crowded as they ever are. Lights flash on in the night clubs. The saxophone player throws a cigarette butt into the auditorium as he prepares to start his evening's work. The policeman in Central Park begins their nightly rounds of ejecting the lovers. An expensive roadster draws up at the curb on Fifth Ave., and a girl, apparently waiting for a bus, climbs in. She will not walk home. Bookworms, shut out from the building, are sitting on the steps of the Public Library, reading with the light from the street lamps. Crossroads in the forties are rapidly deserted by the closely-packed rows of parked cars. A half-dozen thrilled movie fans pick out a home-going waitress as Billie Dove. Tired old women with worn out shoes drag their weary feet along the streets, about to begin their nightly scrubbing in the theaters. Home-going Brooklynites know their rights and curse the taxi driver who plunges his car unfeelingly through a mob at a street corner. A gentleman about town, attired in evening dress drives up to a Park Ave. address in a town car, carrying a suitcase full of rye and gin which he is delivering to a house party. Word-weary movie and play reporters pound out "adequate" and "definitely" in telegraph offices for reviews in the last editions. Beggar are reaping their harvest. Grand Central is filling with commuters. Mrs. S. L. Rothfeld sits in his lofty chambers, consuming hot dog after hot dog as he plans bigger and better movie presentations. Ink-streaked men in trousers and underwear are sitting on the curb at Forty-third St., Times Square, resting between editions of the New York Times. Inside the air is stale with cigarette fumes as rewrite men refresh old stories for later editions. A Greenwich Village poet has a slush of synthetic absinthe as a stimulant to his muse. A gentleman of literary ability also in the Village takes a slug of real absinthe to drown his muse. A youth marches gaily down a deserted street, and the towering granite walls of buildings echo "Ain't She Sweet?" the air thrills forth from his pursed lips.

DETECTIVES PROBE MYSTERIOUS STORY OF DAYTON WOMAN

Dayton detectives are investigating a story told by Mrs. Mary Mitchell, 21, 1524 W. Second St., Dayton, who was removed to Miami Valley Hospital in a hysterical condition after being found wandering along a road near Osborn at 7 o'clock Monday night. She quickly recovered.

Mrs. Mitchell told hospital attendants she became violently ill after drinking a bottle of "pop" purchased by a friend with whom she was riding in an auto near Osborn, and that she was then forced from the machine near the Bath Twp. schoolhouse.

Fred Bettman, 76 S. Garfield St., Dayton, noticed the woman staggering along the highway, and stopped. She fainted before he could reach her. Bettman carried the unconscious woman into a nearby residence where first aid treatment failed to revive her.

Constable Sidney Cornelius, Bath Twp., was summoned and he obtained the ambulance of Morris and Son, in which she was taken to the Dayton hospital. The girl regained consciousness en route to Dayton but fainted once more while being taken into the hospital.

She was hysterical and unable to give a coherent account of her condition for a time. After an examination by a physician, she was pronounced uninjured and in no danger, and was removed to her home.

Household Hints

MENU HINT

In the following luncheon or supper menu a good combination vegetable salad recipe is given. These raw vegetables may be combined in endless variety, using ingredients that give the right colors to carry out a color scheme, if that is what you wish, or merely to look appetizing. Pimientos, tomatoes, carrots, sweet red peppers, all give a bit of contrasting, vivid color.

Bacon
Combination Vegetable Salad
Poppers
Custard Pie
Tea

Today's Recipes

Popovers—One cup flour, one-half teaspoon salt, seven-eighths cup milk, two eggs, one-half teaspoon melted butter. Mix salt and flour and add milk gradually. Add beaten eggs and butter and beat with the egg beater for two minutes. Put in hot gem pans and bake in hot oven thirty to thirty-five minutes.

Combination Vegetable Salad

One cup shredded lettuce, one-half cup grated raw carrot, one-fourth cup diced green sweet pepper, one cup diced celery or cucumber, two cups diced boiled potatoes, salt, mayonnaise. Arrange on platter in layers, adding mayonnaise as you arrange it. Putting pinches of carrot and pepper here and there to give a pleasing dash of color. Bits of red radishes also give a pleasing appearance.

Popovers—Two cups flour, one tablespoon butter, one cup milk, two teaspoons baking powder, a little sugar if you choose. Bake in gem pans.

Cellulose—Is a form of carbohydrate, valuable in nutrition because it adds to the bulk of the matter passing through the intestines—roughage. In some vegetables there is a large amount of cellulose.

SUGGESTIONS

Buttons

Heavy crocheted cotton is the best thing to use when sewing on the buttons on the children's clothes. It will stand any amount of resistance before it will give way.

Makes Handle

Lay a piece of clean, strong string, about six inches long, over the top of each jar of jelly before pouring in the paraffin. Then pour in the paraffin and let it harden over the cord. When you use the jelly just by taking hold of each end of the string and pulling, the paraffin will slip out easily.

Cleans Walls

A bag of cotton flannel large enough to fit over the broom is the best article in the world to clean ceilings and high walls. As soon as it is the least bit soiled it can be removed washed and put back again.

FRESH FRUIT COBBLER

(Mrs. Mary Morton's Daily Tested Recipe.)

One tablespoon butter, one-half cup milk, one teaspoon baking powder, one egg, one cup sugar, one-fourth teaspoon salt, one cup flour, fresh fruit. Place inverted cup in pan, put sweetened fruit (apples, peaches, plums, for instance), around it and pour in the batter. Bake one-half hour in moderate oven and turn out on plate. The juice from the fruit gathers under the cup, thus preventing a soggy dessert.

COINCIDENCE.

Most people, if not superstitious, are at least willing to come halfway to accept what isn't true. We are easily led into interpreting mere coincidence in terms of cause and effect.

An investigation at Leland Stanford university disclosed that three-fourths of 1,286 men and women students believed they had experienced the "feeling of being stared at."

An elaborate series of experiments in the Leland Stanford psychological laboratory showed conclusively that any belief in this feeling of being stared at must be entirely groundless. It is possible to figure out by mathematics, according to laws of probability, whether an event may be explained by chance.

Maybe you think of somebody whom you haven't seen in years and as you turn the corner, there he is! But consider all the folk you think of but do not meet as you turn the corner.

Occasionally, the item of coincidence is so hidden as to be altogether misleading. At Lake Placid, one summer, I listened to a talk by the late James H. Hyslop, then head of the Society of Psychical Research. Now, Hyslop was a thoroughly sincere investigator, having not the slightest desire to perpetrate or perpetuate any form of fraud. He welcomed any new facts pertaining to his subject. So, at the close of his lecture, I sought him out and told him about a little psychic experience of my own.

"While you were talking," I said, "I visualized a man who looked like you, only much younger, in the act of sending a telegram, announcing the death of his father. It was sent to the father's sister, in a distant state, and she was requested to notify another sister, living a few miles from her in the country. This message, according to the impression I have, was carried to the sister in the country by a boy on a bicycle."

"And now," I asked, "has all that any significance? Why should I think of such things while listening to a talk by you? Did your father die some years ago, and did you send a message to a sister in another state? And could your country have been carried to the country by a boy on a bicycle?"

"Yes," he replied; "it all tallies exactly with the facts. Such a message was sent to a sister in Ohio, and it undoubtedly was carried to the country by some one, probably a boy on the bicycle."

"And," I inquired, "how do you explain my getting a flash of such an incident? Was it psychic, spiritualistic, telepathic, or what?"

"I have no theory," he replied. "The fact is, I have no theory about many of the phenomena that we find in these investigations."

By that time my conscience began to prick me, for Hyslop took his work too seriously to have it made the subject of a practical joke. I confessed that here was a simple explanation of the whole thing.

I had been the boy on the bicycle.

How to Achieve Beauty

By MME. HELENA RUBINSTEIN

BEAUTY TIME FOR THE HOME WOMAN.

Of all the women with whom I come in contact, the home woman is the most apt to feel she has no time for beauty. That is, the woman whose home responsibilities are her chief interest, who gets along without a servant or with only one at the most and who has anywhere from one to three children.

There are two main reasons why she neglects her beauty. First of all, she is contented. If she is happily married, she knows that her husband will be getting him his breakfast and you should spend your extra time getting into something neat and attractive so that he will have an attractive vision of you to carry through the day. You probably will not find a large chunk of time you can take out of your day to devote to beauty, but there are sure to be moments you can make count. It really is not necessary to keep your face cream on a great length of time. If you keep it on twenty minutes while you are planning your menus or peeling vegetables, you will have practically the same benefits you would in retaining it over night. The skin can absorb about all it is capable of in that length of time. The same with your astringent balsams and jellies for firming the contour and with your chin straps you can find slices of time during the day when keeping these beautifying agents on will not interfere with your work. There is a balsam and a Roman jelly that will be absorbed right into the skin and can be used at any time during the day.

But the most important thing for the home woman, as for every woman, is to get the beauty habit of mind. The she will rinse her hair with lemon and massage her scalp just as a matter of course.

My next talk will be Beauty Time for the Woman of Much Leisure.

NOT A BARGAIN AFTER ALL

POTTSTOWN, Pa.—George Lappas who conducts a hot wener shop, purchased a safe for $10 and was delighted at the bargain. When the safe was installed, however, he recalled that he had neglected to ask the combination. After experimenting for some time, he summoned a lock expert, who presented him a bill for $21.50.

ACIDOPHILUS MILK.

Mrs. H.—Milk soured with the acidophilus germs undoubtedly is of considerable value in ousting the putrefactive type of germs from the intestinal tract. It is used quite extensively in various disorders. An exclusive diet of this milk for three or four days, or longer, and then the inclusion of a quart, or perhaps a pint a day, in the diet, is recommended.

The manufacturers of the acidophilus cultures which are put up in candy form (with sweetened agar blocks covered with chocolate) say there are as many of the acidophilus germs in one candy block as in one pint of the acidophilus milk. Naturally these candy blocks do not contain the other valuable qualities of milk. However, if you cannot get the acidophilus milk and can get the candy blocks and take a pint of regular milk every day, you would probably get the same benefits as from the acidophilus milk.

You say you are very thin. Have you had an examination by a competent physician to see what is the cause of your trouble? Better send for our pamphlet on gaining weight. (Enclose 10 cents in stamps with a fully self-addressed, stamped envelope.) We have had wonderful reports from its use.

No, I never heard of any vermifuge for gaining weight! Certainly vermifuge should not be taken unless there are worms, and then under the direction of a physician.

Goiters. I am not infrequently gently chided for paying so much attention to the Friendly Fat Fraternity, but I continue serenely in my course, for I know of nothing I can do in public health education that is more effective in disease prevention. Besides a reducing course is one that can be home-made. And many of those who write to me want help on diseases that should be under the constant supervision of a physician. Naturally, I always have to recommend that you have periodic health examinations by your physician in all cases, sick or well.

E. wants me to talk more on exophthalmic goiters. She says there are almost as many of us as the army of the F. F. F.

While goiter (especially the simple type that is but an enlargement of the thyroid gland without disease symptoms), is fairly common, it isn't nearly so common as overweight is, E.; and exophthalmic goiter, which really is a serious disease, while not rare, is not common.

In simple goiter the thyroid gland is believed to be deficient in iodine. This may be due to a lack of iodine in the food. Simple goiter is noticeably prevalent in districts where the land has been leached of its iodine—the so-called goiter belts. This type is often cured and prevented by iodine medication, either in the form of iodized salt or tablets or simple iodine, but the dosage should be supervised by the physician.

Simple goiter can also be caused by a diet that interferes with the absorption of iodine. McCarrison found that by feeding animals with too much fat he could produce goiter. Putrefactive conditions in the intestines might cause non-absorption.

The exophthalmic goiters are altogether different, and one who has this type of goiter has an acute disease. In this type, it is believed there is too much thyroid secretion. Physicians do give a course of medication for it, but usually this type of goiter has to be removed surgically. The cause is not fully known, but unhygienic living and wrong diet are undoubtedly factors.

We have an article which goes into the subject a little more in detail. Enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope with request.

Twenty Years

Mr. W. C. Sutton, Green St. music dealer, has purchased the old Keohloher property at Market and Collier Sts. James Adair, who has been confined to his bed for several days is now able to be out and expects to return to school at Denison next week.

The full term of the fourteenth year of Cedarville College opens September 10.

Farmer Kennedy's fair at Wilmington gives promise of being an unusually big event this year.

The teachers were highly entertained by several excellent addresses on the fourth day of the institute.

I Have Said in My Heart

FASHION.

The fashion experts are out with the information that brown and gray are to be the coming colors for fall. Consequently, while it is probable that we will see more of these colors than any others during the coming month, no girl need worry because she must wear some other color.

The manufacturers have probably had their looms making webs of these colors both in silks and wools, all spring and summer for all.

There is a pleasing fiction that fashion is something born of woman's caprice, it is in reality a hard and fast factor in commercial life.

France has always recognized this. Ever since the enactment of the sumptuary laws, the laws of fashion have not been the moods of women, but necessities of commerce.

New colors, new textures, must be made from time to time, so that the wheels of business be kept moving.

Those who know this and have known it for hundreds of years, depend upon the one great psychological law—"There is nothing changeless in this world but change," and they try to find the moment when the jaded voracity of fashion becomes tired of style that is and is looking for a style that will be new. Then having decided that the time is right, they change a little.

Fashion is never radical. It does not push its way past all obstacles; rather it creeps slowly around them.

Do you older women remember how long it took for women to become accustomed to the low, small hats now universally worn? They began to creep in before the war, and even today Queen Mary and many other women still perch concoctions of flowers and ribbons on the top of their heads.

But to get back to brown and gray for the color of your new winter costume.

Brown is a warmer color than gray, especially the red browns which are already seen in the shops.

It looks better on the brown-eyed girl than one with eyes of blue.

Brown is seldom becoming to black-eyed girls. It does not combine well with other colors; so unless you can have many accessories all of a variation of tint, brown is an expensive color.

A woman must be pretty sure she is pretty if she wears gray. The color is good on redheaded girls whose brilliant color needs subduing.

It can, however, be combined with black, yellow, blue, pink, or in fact any other color except brown, and so made wearable by all ages and complexions.

Memo:—Be sure and study not only your inclination but your personality before buying your winter wardrobe.

Living and Loving

BY MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

DISCOURAGED

What a tangle life seems sometimes! Hardly worth living. We would just like to cut loose and go to the moon or the "Never, Never, Never Land," or somewhere where things would be different. My private guess is, however, that we'd be glad to get back and tackle the same old problems with a whim.

That is just what is the matter with the discouraged little wife who writes me the following letter:

"Dear Mrs. Lee: I am a woman 24 years old and have been married almost six years and have a child 20 months old. We live in the city and I'm getting anxious to go back to our home in the south. My husband works in a factory and doesn't seem like he wants to go back. He says he does but doesn't write anything to his folks about it and don't make any arrangements to go. We lived on a farm the first two years we were married and I felt satisfied. It seems that he loves me at times and other times he doesn't. He takes me any place I want to go and other times he comes in and reads the paper and won't say much to either of us. Then I get the blues.

"The first two years I husked corn and helped him all I could on the farm and worked in the factory after we came to town until the baby was born, and did my own washing and have kept boarders most of the time since, but he doesn't seem to appreciate it. I'm too old-fashioned to suit his sisters. They use lipstick and arch their eyebrows and dress fine, but I can't do that for my husband doesn't make much and I want to save and buy a little home some day. My life is a misery to me, and if we go back home I'm afraid he'll think he isn't making enough and want to leave us there and come back here to work and I just can't stay away from him. I feel there's no one but him."

"DISCOURAGED WIFE AND BABE"

Bless your heart, my dear girl, you've worked so hard your nerves are just on edge, and everything is distorted. If you can possibly manage it get your husband to go on a vacation visit to your people, and then come back together. If he can't possibly arrange to go, go yourself with the baby, even if it is only for a week. Of course your husband doesn't always feel like going out or making a fuss over you every evening. He's tired and wants to rest and read his paper. Why don't you take a section and read, too, and then you can talk about it? According to letters I get all the men are looking for an old-fashioned wife, but don't let it go too far. It would probably do you a lot of good to "doff all up" and do a bit of flirting with that man of yours. Cheer up, dear. You'll have that little home and everything after awhile.

Auto Races Draw 2,000 Fans To Fairground

TWO DRIVERS CRASH THROUGH FENCE BUT SPEEDERS NOT HURT

Tom Wall, Greencastle, Pa., Wins Lion's Share Of Track Honors

Fully 2,000 persons witnessed automobile races at the Greene County Fairgrounds Labor Day afternoon under the sponsorship of Guy Wade, promoter. The drivers made rather slow time over the half-mile dirt oval but the races were considered a success.

Only two small mishaps marred the pastime. Ray Brehm drove his racer through the outer fence at a turn in the opening race but the driver was not injured and the car not damaged.

Phil Malaney crashed through the inner guard rail in the second race, losing control of the car while negotiating a sharp curve at high speed. Malaney was unhurt but his yellow racer was slightly damaged.

Tom Wall, youthful speed king from Greencastle, Pa., won the lion's share of honors during the afternoon in his Frontenac. Wall, the dare devil type, besides making the best time in qualifying heat of two laps, won three of the four races for professional dirt track drivers, winning every race in which he was entered.

In the qualifications, six drivers qualified in time of thirty-eight seconds or better for the half-mile. Wall sped around the oval in thirty-three seconds. Other drivers to qualify were Joe Malaney, thirty-four seconds; C. C. Johnson, Hugh Arnold and Ed Sipp, thirty-five seconds, and Ray Brehm, thirty-eight seconds.

Tom Wall won the first event, the Australian Pursuit Race, in quick fashion. This race was run with four cars, each placed at equal distances around the track. At the drop of the starter's flag they were off and the object was to catch and pass the car immediately ahead. As soon as a car is overtaken, that car must pull off to the side and quit. To win the race, one car must pass all of the others.

In this event, one racer never got started, a second smashed into the fence, and Wall quickly overtook and passed the third after four laps had been covered.

Wall also won the second event, a five-mile match race between three professional drivers representing Ohio, Pennsylvania and Indiana. Wall represented Pennsylvania and won in the record-breaking time of five and one-half minutes. C. C. Johnson, for Indiana, trailed all the way. Malaney, the third entrant crashed through a fence on the first turn of the opening lap.

Ed Sipp won the third event, limited to the three cars which qualified in thirty-five seconds. Sipp reeled off the ten laps in six minutes flat. C. C. Johnson was second while Hugh Arnold dropped out.

The fourth event, restricted to stock cars from Greene and surrounding counties, a free-for-all race, proved a fizzle because of few entries. Three cars were entered, two privately owned, and the five-mile jaunt was won by Harold Penewit, of Ankeny and Weaver, in a Chrysler. His two competitors, Henry Roan, colored, in a stripped-down Dodge, and Fred Seury, driving a Ford, quit after several laps.

Penewit finished the race alone in the fast time of six minutes, forty seconds.

The closing event, a five-mile handicap race, developed the keenest competition of the afternoon and furnished plenty of thrills. Four drivers started, Ray Brehm, C. C. Johnson, Ed Sipp and Tom Wall, and were handicapped in the order named.

Wall won the event from Johnson after closing a wide gap. Johnson drove a heady race and managed to keep in front of the Greencastle youth for eight laps. On the ninth lap, Wall passed him at the turn and won easily.

Promoter Guy Wade acted as starter with Dilver Belden, auto club secretary, as judge, and Lawrence Purdon, announcer. A number of checkers and timers also occupied the judge's stand.

REV. TILFORD WILL HEAD MINISTERS

The Rev. William H. Telford, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, was elected president of the Xenia Ministerial Association Monday to succeed the Rev. V. F. Brown, D. D., who is resigning as pastor of Trinity M. E. Church.

The Rev. D. A. Sellers, pastor of the First Reformed Church was elected vice president, and the Rev. H. B. McElree, secretary and treasurer. The association discussed plans for the union evangelistic services which open for three weeks at the First M. E. Church, September 18, with the Rev. W. E. Belterworth, evangelist.

AUTO DAMAGED IN COLLISION HERE

The radiator on a roadster occupied by two girls, whose names were not learned, was damaged in a rear-end collision with a truck of the Springfield Dairy Products Co., 145 Hill St., driven by Dorsey Nichols, employee, at Detroit and Second Sts., Tuesday morning at 11:45 o'clock.

Witnesses declared the truck driver had signaled for a left-hand turn at the intersection, and that the roadster failed to observe the signal, the car skidding and crashing into the rear of the truck. No one was injured. Both the truck and roadster were going north on Detroit St.

BOWERSVILLE BAYLIFFS BEAT WAYNESVILLE, LOOP LEADERS

Bowersville Bayliffs are making a clean sweep on their last circuit of the Triangle League. Having defeated Jamestown 3 to 2, the Bayliffs finally won a game from Waynesville Sunday, the score being 14 to 2.

Bowersville started its bombardment in the second inning and never ceased. In the second Cox sent a line drive between center and left, out of the playing field, good for a homer.

In the third, with two down and the bases filled, D. Murrell cut loose with a double scoring two runs, and E. Haughey drove in another with a single. Bowersville then took an inning to reload its bats, then cut loose again in the sixth. With two on Smith sent a triple to right center, and scored himself a minute later when V. Haughey singled.

GOLFERS TAKE PART IN LABOR DAY PLAY AT COUNTRY CLUB

Taking advantage of the perfect holiday weather, men and women golfers swarmed the Xenia Country Club links both morning and afternoon on Labor Day.

Play in the qualifying rounds for the annual men's fall "scratch" tournament was begun Monday, and a number of players turned in scores that will probably make them eligible to compete in the approaching first round of match play next week. Various handicaps of players will receive no consideration in this tourney.

Golfers may play their qualifying rounds of eighteen holes any day this week.

Club members were served luncheon at the clubhouse at noon. Lawrence Landaker was chairman of the committee of women members, which had the luncheon in charge.

In the afternoon a mixed tourney was held, open to both men and women.

First prize was won by A. H. Finley, paired with Mrs. Rachel Kelly. Second honors went to E. H. Heathman and Mrs. W. C. Craig, while Frederick Flynn and Mrs. Eber Reynolds were awarded third prize. About thirty men and women players participated in the mixed tournament.

WAYNESVILLE SETS TRIANGLE LOOP PAGE

Waynesville continues to set the pace in the Triangle League, but its margin over the second place Wilmington nine was reduced to one full game by Sunday's games.

Waynesville lost to Bowersville while Wilmington was sharing a double-header with Spring Valley, winning the first contest 4 to 1 and dropping the nightcap 3 to 2. Jamestown trounced Bellbrook in the other Triangle League game by a score of 6 to 3.

League Standing:

Team	W.	L.	Pct.
Waynesville	12	7	.632
Wilmington	11	8	.579
Bowersville	9	9	.500
Bellbrook	9	10	.474
Spring Valley	8	10	.444
Jamestown	7	12	.368

HOLD XENIAN FOR STARTING TROUBLE

Thomas Jordan, 45, 746 W. Second St., is being held in the County Jail awaiting arraignment in Probate Court on a probable charge of intoxication, following his arrest at the home of his brother-in-law, Abraham Free, in Beaver Creek Twp., five miles northwest of Xenia, by Sheriff Ohmer Tate and Deputy Sheriff George Sugden late Monday night.

Jordan, who was accompanied by his wife to Free's residence, is alleged to have started a family quarrel. Sheriff Tate was told that Jordan began breaking up the household furnishings and created such a disturbance that Free finally intervened and knocked him down, rendering him unconscious for a time.

Free then summoned the officers. Unless Free signs an affidavit charging a more serious offense, Jordan will be charged with intoxication.

Sour Stomach

"Phillips Milk of Magnesia" Better than Soda

Instead of soda hereafter take a little "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" in water any time for indigestion or sour, acid, gassy stomach, and relief will come instantly.

For fifty years genuine "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it overcomes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. It neutralizes acid fermentations in the bowels and gently urges the souring waste from the system without purging. Besides, it is more pleasant to take than soda. Insist upon "Phillips." Twenty-five cent and fifty cent bottles, any drugstore. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. Registered Trade Mark of The Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor, Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

XENIA GOLFERS TO PLAY MIDDLETOWN

Golfers of the Xenia Country Club, undefeated in the three inter-city golf matches played this summer, will attempt to preserve this record in the concluding match of the season at Middletown Wednesday afternoon.

Xenia defeated Middletown in a close match over the local course earlier in the season, but the handicap of playing on a strange links will be reversed this time.

Twenty-five golfers are expected to compose the Xenia team which will make the trip to Middletown. The match will start promptly at 1 o'clock.

SUGGESTS THREE WEEKS.
DETROIT, Mich.—A woman failed to make a happy choice of an alias name when she was arrested by a patrolman on a charge of being drunk. When Judge John U. Brennan asked her what her name was she said: Elinor Glyn. "If that's the case, the only thing to do is to give you three weeks," said the judge as he sentenced her to the house of correction. She's probably cured of using the name of the author of "Three Weeks."

BRITISH HELP STOP PIRACY AT HOWCHOW

HONG KONG, Sept. 6.—A British naval squadron and a detachment of Cantonese troops were reported today to have captured the pirate ship "Howchow" in the waters off the coast of Hong Kong.

Eighteen shells were fired into the village of Shekhi, where the Chinese freebooters landed their loot. The residents of Taipinghu, whence the pirates came, were ordered to evacuate the town and British sailors then fired the water cannon. Both Shekhi and Taipinghu were virtually deserted today, it was reported.

The Theater

If Eric Von Stroheim, the German adventurer and soldier of fortune who has worked his way into the top-notch of motion picture production has his way, the public will soon see a nineteen reel movie.

When Von Stroheim finished production on "The Wedding March," the picture was found to Von Stroheim's idea is to have the picture halved, the halves running simultaneously in two houses. Patrons would be given tickets for both showings for one price. Meantime there is the matter of the $1,600,000 which has been sunk into the production.

Von Stroheim's "Greed," when completed offered the same dilemma. It was finally cut to two and a half hours' entertainment but was never considered a box office success.

If Lew Cody smiles a lot in his next picture you'll know why. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is said to be giving Lew a new three-year contract and a salary boost.

"The Flag Pole Sitter" is the name of a picture to be made by Universal. Guess what it is about.

Paramount is ready in case Adolphe Menjou breaks with the organization. The producers are said to have lined up Wilfred Lucas, called a dead ringer for Menjou, and he is being groomed as a type sophisticate.

be twenty-five reels long. After eliminating the only scenes that could be eliminated the picture was still nineteen reels long.

Paramount, it is said, wanted the film cut to feature but Von Stroheim balked. Then it was suggested that the picture be made into two separate stories but this, also wouldn't do.

FARMER WOMAN IN OKLAHOMA
Praises Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Because It Gave Her Health and Strength

In a sunny pasture in Oklahoma, a herd of sleek cows was grazing. They made a pretty picture. But the thin woman in the blue checked apron sighed as she looked at them. She was tired of cows, tired of her tedious work in the dairy. She was tired of cooking for a household of boarders, besides caring for her own family. The burdens of life seemed too heavy for her falling health. She had lost confidence in herself.

One day she began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and her general health began to improve. She took it faithfully. Now she can do her work without any trouble, sleeps well and is no longer blue and tired.

This woman, Mrs. Cora Short, R. 9, Box 387, Oklahoma City, Okla., writes: "Everybody now says: 'Mrs. Short, what are you doing to yourself?' I weigh 135 and my weight before I took it was 115. I have taken seven bottles of the Vegetable Compound."

IN THE BEGINNING

Jack-in-the-Box settled himself comfortably by Peter's side, rested his head upon the ground, and for a moment was so still that the Boy thought he, too, was going to take a nap.

"Of course, he has to pay for it!" said Tortoise, suddenly, and shut his jaws with a snap so loud that Peter jumped.

"Who had to pay and for what?" demanded the Boy. "What are you talking about?"

"About something you've been teasing me to tell you for a long, long while!" Tortoise grinned and wiggled his toes. "And now that I have made a beginning with my tale of the Three Cousins, you interrupt me by asking foolish questions."

Peter looked bewildered.

"Foolish questions!" repeated he. "Well, if you call it foolish to want to know who's who and what's what in a story, then I can't imagine what you would call sensible. Besides, who ever heard of starting a tale in the middle. Begin at the beginning, why don't you? That's the proper way."

Tortoise turned and stared at the Boy.

"Hum! A youngster Two-Legs like you trying to tell an old-timer like myself how to do things! Why, I have told stories years and years and years before you were born. However, since it is you who is to listen, you might as well have things your own way. After all, perhaps you're right. Since this is a story of the beginning of Turtle history, it ought to begin at the beginning. Let's see! Where was I?"

"You were not anywhere at all," declared Peter, shortly. "That's just the trouble. All you said was 'He had to pay for it.' Whom do you mean?"

"I mean the Cousin who went to sea," replied Jack-in-the-Box. "You see, of the three, 'twas Salt Water Turtle that had the most fun of it in the beginning. He went the furthest, saw the strangest sights and met the most people. He grew to be the strongest, too, and his shell became as tough as leather and his legs so strong that not many Two-Legs would fancy it for food. Any one would think that he was the most fortunate fellow, but he had to pay for all these good things—and he did it with his life."

Sally's Shoulders

by BEATRICE BURTON, Author of "HER MAN," "HONEY LOU," "THE HOLLYWOOD GIRL," ETC.

READ THIS FIRST:
SALLY JEROME is the mainstay of her family in the absence of her father, who does not live with her mother. MRS. JEROME enjoys poor health so Sally does the housework mornings and office work afternoons. BEAU and MILLIE, her brother and sister, give nothing towards the upkeep of the home.
TED SLOAN is in love with Sally and wants her to marry him and keep on working. But the only man who interests her is JOHN NYE, whom she has met in the office. He is blind, infatuated with Millie, who says he would make her a good husband; but in the meantime she is having a love affair with a bond salesman named DAVIDSON, whose affection for her is not very great.
While Millie is ill with appendicitis Sally works for John Nye, and he offers her a permanent place in his office. But Sally, hurt by something that Millie says he said about her, refuses the position and goes into the wayside inn business with her AUNT EMILY JEROME.
The business does not prosper until Aunt Em hires a jazz band and Sally puts on a nightly exhibition dance with Ted Sloan for dancing partner—all this to the horror of Mrs. Jerome, who has brought the whole family to live at Aunt Em's, including Beau's new wife, MABEL. Beau does nothing but pile up dishonorable debts, and Sally once more finds herself with the entire family to support, except for an occasional check from her father.
A coldness springs up between Millie and John Nye. Millie says it is because Nye is so jealous of Davidson. One night Nye comes out to the inn and confesses to Sally in the arms of Ted Sloan. He goes away without a word, to the bewilderment of Sally. That night Ted admits that he is ashamed of dancing publicly, and after that Sally dances all alone. Mabel's baby is born, and shortly afterward Beau starts running around nights. Mabel decides he has too much freedom and plans to go to work to furnish a home of their own, while Sally tends the baby. She gets a position in John Nye's office after Millie leaves it—because, so she says, John Nye insulted her with his attentions. Later she goes to work in Davidson's office. Mr. Jerome returns home very sick, and one afternoon Sally and her mother hear him groan and then fall out of bed.
(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY)

CHAPTER XVI
SALLY thought that her father was dead when she flung open the door of his room. He was lying on the floor, and his hands and face were the same shade as the bathrobe of gray Turkish toweling that was wrapped around him.
"He must have tried to get out of bed by himself," she thought aloud, although there was no one in the darkened room with her. Mrs. Jerome, who avoided all unpleasant things as she would have avoided the black plague, had not followed her at the sound of that heavy fall.
She had stayed behind in the hall, waiting for Sally to go and find out what had happened, all by herself.
Sally lifted her father to the bed. He was singularly light and easy for her to pick up in her strong, young arms.
"Poor Dad," thought Sally, and as she held him, she suddenly had since the long-ago days when he had been a gay and chipper young man who had taken her to picture shows and the circus.
It seemed to her that she had forgotten how much she had loved him, all through those years, when he had left all of them alone to shift for themselves. But now it came surging back to her—that love for him. The love she had had for him when she was 9 years old.
She was crying softly as she picked up the telephone on the stand beside the bed, and gave Dr. Ambleside's number.
While she was speaking to him her father's eyelids fluttered up and he looked at her. His hands moved, locking themselves on his thin chest. Sally gave a great sigh of relief.
"Guess I must have got a little faint," he murmured thickly as she hung up the receiver and turned to him. "I thought I'd get up to get a drink of water. The thermos bottle was empty."
"My fault!" Sally blamed herself. It was the first time she had forgotten to keep the bottle filled with the special mineral water that Dr. Ambleside had ordered for Mr. Jerome.
But, somehow, it was easy to forget important things lately in The House by the Side of the Road. For there were so many, many things for Sally to do, and all of them important ones. The baby to be fed, bathed and tenderly watched from morning till night. Mr. Jerome to be cared for almost as carefully as the baby had to be cared for. Mrs. Jerome to be waited on, hand, foot and finger, all day long.
And besides that, there's the down stairs work—and the dancing," thought Sally, hurrying down to the kitchen with the empty thermos bottle in her hands.
Today there had been an extra job. Aunt Em had decided she ought to have a new costume for the new dance—the Savannah Stomp. And so Sally had "thrown together" a gay gypsy costume of cheap, bright-colored calico, all sewed with little bells. She had planned to stitch it neatly late that night, when she could carry the electric sewing machine down into the dining room, where the noise of it would disturb no one.
It took hard figuring these days to do all the things that had to be done. "And then," said Sally to herself, "I never get caught up somehow."
With the bottle filled she rushed upstairs to give her father his drink of water, and to reassure her mother that he was all right.
But Sally, herself, was not at all sure that he was all right. He was so quiet and listless, somehow, as if he did not care whether he was alive or not.
For days she had been growing more worried about him, and her worry was reflected in her mirror-like face when she opened the door to Dr. Ambleside at 6 o'clock.
In the restaurant the three musicians who constituted Aunt Em's "jazz band" were tuning up. Aunt Em was giving Hilda, the waitress, several orders her high-pitched voice. Upstairs the baby was waiting for no reason at all except that it was a baby and got its exercise by crying with all its might.
The front door opened and Millie came flying into the house, bringing the freshness of the rain with her. She banged the door behind her and called out: "Well, I've had to quit ANOTHER job!" in a loud, shrill voice before she caught sight of the doctor, who was halfway up the

"I think I'll go with them, too," Millie said, "if you'll lend me the money."

He stopped, frowning down at her. Then he turned to Sally, who was just behind him.
"I asked you people to keep Mr. Jerome perfectly quiet," he said in that terrifying, solemn voice that doctors have. "Is this the way you do it?" He was plainly angry at the way his orders had not been carried out.
Scowling and shaking his head, he went into the sick room, smartly closing the door in Sally's face.
She stood, staring at it perplexedly for a moment. Then she turned and ran lightly down the stairs to ask the three musicians not to play that night.
Millie was in the room she had been sharing with Sally ever since her father's return, when Sally hurried into it and began to strip off the gypsy costume, garment by garment.
"Our Dad sick again?" asked Millie, in the polite tones of a person asking after a neighbor's health. Millie had no affection for her father.
"How can I love him when I don't know him?" she asked Sally severely. "He seems like a perfect stranger to me—after staying away from us all these years."
Tonight she was absent-minded and paid little attention to Sally's answer. She took off her wet raincoat and tossed it into a corner of the room.
Then she sat down on the floor and peeled off her wet silk stockings and threw them after the raincoat. If Millie ever hung anything up it was by accident.
Perhaps that was Sally's fault. Sally, who went behind her "like a lady's maid, picking up the things she dropped, washing out her soiled silk stockings, cleaning her hair brushes, putting the lids on her boxes of flesh-colored, violet-scented face powder. Sally, who had spoiled her for years and years.
It was Sally now who picked up the wet clothing and hung it over the back of a chair to dry, and then handed her a clean, white Hoover apron to put on.
"Why did you quit your job?" she asked, as she watched Millie slip into the apron and brush the wide, soft waves of golden hair down over her ears.
Before Millie had time to answer there came a sharp knock on the door, and then Dr. Ambleside's voice asking for Sally.
"Is there any place in this house where I can have two minutes' talk with you?" he asked, still frowning.
Sally led him down the stairs and down the hall to Aunt Em's tiny office. It was dark and empty at this time of day.
They went in, and Sally turned on the desk lamp and closed the door.
"Now, then," began the doctor, "your father has got to have peace and quiet, as I've been telling you. He can't get them in this house, evidently. He's been through a hard sickness, and he's got to be built up by the right kind of food and quiet and rest. It's too bad he can't get away somewhere—on a sea voyage, for instance. Not now, of course, but in a couple of weeks, when he's stronger. Or to the mountains."
Sally's blue eyes were wide and thoughtful as she took in his words. Sea voyages . . . mountains. They were just words to her, poor as she always had been.
And now here was Dr. Ambleside, actually telling her that perhaps they were the things that would cure her father of the bodily ills that had brought him, so listless and lifeless, to the bed upstairs.
"A sea voyage . . . mountains . . . money," she said to herself. "Money . . . Everything comes back to money, money, money." It was the root, not only of all evil, as the proverb said—but of many other things besides. Health and happiness, for instance.
"Could you go with him?" Dr. Ambleside was asking now. He had taken care of Mrs. Jerome for so many years that he knew how useless and helpless she would be as a nurse for a sick man.

Sally shook her head. "I couldn't," she faltered. "There's so much to do here. I couldn't. But I think I could get the money together for Mother and him to go away somewhere. In two weeks or so, you say?"
She had only the faintest notion as to where she was going to get the money. That vague notion had to do with Aunt Emily and the family album, where Aunt Emily had some of her savings.
"And lately we've really been making money," Sally said to herself one way upstairs, after the doctor had gone. "Maybe Aunt Em will advance me some, and let me pay it back a little at a time."
She opened the door of her room and went in. Millie was still standing beside the dresser, fingering the perfume pencils that covered her side of the marble top. She had just finished making up her face, and it was as artificial looking as a French doll's when she looked up at Sally.
"What did the old pill shooter want?" she asked in her liquid drawl. "Oh, he says Dad's got to get away to the mountains or for an ocean voyage or something like that," answered Sally, picking up the parts of her new gypsy costume to hang them away in the clothes closet.
"What's that stuff?" asked Millie, brightly, swinging around to herself one mirror. "The new dress you're making to dance in?" Millie was always more interested in new clothes than she was in anything else—except new men.
"Cute!" she cried admiringly, holding up the gay flowered skirt, with its edge of little gilt bells. "Darling! Well, what are you going to do about Dad? You told the doctor we haven't any money for trips like that, didn't you? Dad ought to be in the hospital, anyway. It's such a bother having him around the house. We have to be so quiet, and I can't use the extension in his room the way I used to."
Before Mr. Jerome had come home Millie had done most of her very private telephoning from the extension in that room. And she missed it.

"Oh, I think I can get Aunt Em to lend us enough money to send Dad and Mother somewhere," Sally answered her. "It's too bad I can't go along, too. Dad needs a nurse, and Mother's not very strong."
"Well, I think I'll just go with them, then!" Millie broke in, abruptly. "If you'll lend me the money when you get son from Aunt Em. I've had a row with Davy and I'm not going to work in the same office with him anymore, anyhow! So I might just as well go along with the folks. I'm a wonderful nurse!"
She had never nursed so much as a single sick kitten in all her life, let alone a human being! But Sally knew that, in some way, Millie would manage to go along as Mr. Jerome's nurse. Millie always went where she wanted to go, just as she always got what she wanted, and did what she wanted to do.

DRY LEADERS MOURN PASSING OF FAMOUS PROHIBITION HEAD

for young Wheeler was helping to pay his way through college by taking care of the building. He also sold books, peddled rug-making machines and taught rural schools during vacations.
Wheeler did not jump at the proposition Dr. Russell offered him, for at that tender age, he had not thought seriously of making temperance or prohibition work a career. However, after careful consideration, and probably remembering the pitchfork episode, he accepted.
That was in May, 1893, and from that day until the day of his death, Wheeler served the organization. He rose gradually through all the ranks of the league organization, withstanding many bitter attacks and weathering the days when the exhortations of its workers fell upon the ears of a world none too willing to listen.

Was Legal Light.
Wheeler made a special study of the legal side of prohibition, a phase that became of great importance with the ramifications of the dry war. Wheeler found himself pitted against such a political figure as Mark Hanna when he was striving to muster enough supporters to make prohibition a national issue. It was at that time that Hanna said to him:
"Young man, your kind of people are all right at a prayer meeting, but they are no good at a caucus." Whereupon Wheeler replied: "Well, sir, we will see."
The outcome was a defeat of the Hanna candidate for the Ohio senate.

Wheeler's death was sudden. He was stricken some weeks ago, but had been in the sanitarium only three days. At three o'clock yesterday afternoon Wheeler was apparently well and in good spirits. He suddenly lurched forward, as the nurse, physician and members of his family were at the bedside. An examination showed he had died instantly when the attack came.

Dr. Lloyd C. Verity announced that Wheeler's death was caused by a heart attack aggravated by kidney trouble.

The Queen Anne HOME HEATER

Heats 20 to 100 Per Cent More Space

The Queen Anne's 20% to 100% greater space heating capacity is obtained through a scientific and proper balance between the three essentials of a good heating plant: grate surface, radiating surface and free air space.

To take care of the greater heat developed by the Queen Anne's larger grate area, 6,132 square inches of heat-radiating surface are provided.

To move and circulate with rapidity the resulting greater amount of heat so released, a larger space for the free passage of air (free air space) is provided. Air is drawn in from underneath and passes upward around ALL FOUR SIDES—instead of but three as in other heaters.

The first genuine warm air furnace to be successfully built into a beautiful period cabinet was the Queen Anne. The new improved Queen Anne of today continues the leadership so established.

DEATH CLAIMS WAYNE B. WHEELER

MACREADY ALTITUDE RECORD MAY STAND YOUNG HILL DENIES MATRICIDE

RECORD MAY STAND

Discovery That Title Holder Forged Barograph Sheet, Disqualifies Him—McCook Field Flight May Be Record

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—Lieutenant John A. Macready, United States army aviator who flew to an altitude of 38,704 feet at McCook Field, Dayton, Ohio, on January 29, 1926, likely will be credited with the world record for that achievement, it was learned in aviation circles here today following reports from Paris that Jean Callizo, the present title holder had been disqualified for forging a barograph sheet on his record making flight.

Callizo, a French civilian pilot, was credited with an altitude of 41,995 feet on August 23, 1926. An engineer who had become suspicious of Callizo's proposed flight had concealed a second barograph in the wing of the plane unknown to the pilot. This instrument, according to charges before the French records committee, testified to an altitude of only 14,764 feet.

Callizo's record will be stricken from the official rolls of the International Aeronautic Society, after which, in behalf of the American Aeronautical Association, Macready's record will be forwarded to Paris for consideration by the International Committee.

WHEELER'S DEMISE REMOVES POWERFUL FIGURE AT CAPITAL

Little Man In Gallery Controlled Many Congress Members

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—Wayne B. Wheeler is dead, and Washington attached almost as much importance to his passing today as it would to the removal of some great political party chieftain.

That fact, in itself, constitutes an eloquent tribute to the power and prestige of the little man who for a quarter of a century has been the driving force, the flaming spirit, the master mind of the American prohibition movement.

To the politicians of the capital, Republican and Democratic alike, Wheeler has meant prohibition and prohibition has meant Wheeler. The names have been synonymous in their minds. Probably no man has ever so completely embodied a cause as Wheeler embodied prohibition, and the speculation was keen today as to his successor and the effect his death will have on the national politics of the next decade.

In his little office in the shadow of the capitol, and in an inconspicuous seat in the galleries of congress, the little generalissimo of the prohibition forces kept a close tab on literally hundreds of congressmen and others in official life. He had them card-indexed and pigeon-holed—all with reference to only one subject, prohibition. Comparatively few cared to defy him openly, for to do so inevitably meant trouble in the next campaign. He had a way of going into a state or a congressional district and unloosing all kinds of political trouble on the head of one who has no "right" with the Anti-Saloon League.

So, year after year, he divided his time between his somewhat dingy little office at the base of Capitol Hill, and the galleries of congress, always watchful, always alert. A nod of his head, a wave of his hand in the galleries, and it was not an unusual sight to see a half a dozen members leave the floor and consult with him in the corridors. Time and again, wet members of congress have caustically called public attention to the little man in the gallery and "deplored" his open control over votes on the floor. But Wheeler always grinned sardonically and went blithely ahead with his mission—which was to make America dry.

Several times in recent years movements were started to bar him from the galleries, but they always came to nothing. He had too many supporters and too much power for that.

It is little wonder then that the politicians of Capitol Hill were keenly interested today in his successor. On every hand today there was heard the question: "Who's going to succeed Wheeler?" There was no mistaking the interest in the answer, or the importance of the matter to those who have depended upon his support in their biennial struggles for re-election.

In the speculation as to his successor today three names were prominently mentioned—Bishop James Cannon, Jr., chairman of the league's campaign committee; Dr. F. Scott McBride, general superintendent of the league; and Dr. E. C. H. Cherrington of Westerville, O., the home of the league.

Whether the mantle of Wheeler will fall to one of these remains to be seen, but irrespective of where it falls the belief was universal among politicians in Washington today that the prohibition movement has lost its greatest driving force.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 6.—Funeral plans were being made here early today for Albert L. Shoppell, 34, Columbus business man who was accidentally shot while practicing shooting with a revolver near Pleasantville. One of Shoppell's companions dropped a revolver while handing it to Shoppell and it discharged, the bullet penetrating his head.

MARCUS LOEW IS SUDDENLY TAKEN

MARCUS LOEW

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Marcus Loew, whose name is identified with the motion picture industry around the world, died in his sleep at his palatial home in Glen Cove, L. I., yesterday.

The owner of the nation-wide chain of motion picture and vaudeville theaters had been ill for three months. He first was stricken with pneumonia, and after partial recovery he had been seeking to regain his health in travel and medical treatment.

Two weeks ago, accompanied by his physician and nurses, he went to Saratoga Springs, hoping that rest and a course of treatment there would renew his vitality.

Mr. Loew was 55 years old May 7. He was born in New York in the old East Side which has produced so many self-made men. In 1894 he was married to Carrie Rosenheim.

Loew is recognized as the first man to foresee the tremendous future of the motion picture industry and he has been riding at the crest of that industry ever since. At the time of his death he was the president of nearly 100 theatrical corporations.

BONE CAUSES DEATH

ZANESVILLE SCHOOL OPENING POSTPONED DUE TO EPIDEMIC

ZANESVILLE, O., Sept. 6.—Zanesville city schools, scheduled to resume today, were ordered to postpone the opening by local health authorities today, as a precaution, after two cases of infantile paralysis, the first in this county, were reported over the week-end. The tentative date of reopening is September 19.

Schools at Frazzysburg, near here, were also closed indefinitely, when one case of paralysis developed there. This case is in a family of eight children, who already are under quarantine as the result of another of the children having scarlet fever.

The Parkinson district school, near here, also has delayed its

ILLINOIS OFFICERS ARRIVE IN SEATTLE TUESDAY FOR YOUTH

Father Offers To Help Boy—Wires Harry To Return

SEATTLE, Wash., Sept. 6.—Officers from LaSalle County, Illinois, were to arrive here today to take charge of Harry R. Hill, 22, who faces trial in Streator, Ill., for the murder of his aged mother, Mrs. Eliza Hill.

The youth was arrested here Saturday night after being trailed across the continent from Streator. Although registered at a hotel here under the name of Jackson, Hill readily admitted his identity.

He denied, however, he was guilty of his mother's death, maintaining he had fled because he was "in trouble over some bad checks."

Repeated attempts of officers to wring a confession from him have failed. The youth, despondent since his arrest, was more cheerful today, having received a telegram from his father, Dr. H. C. Hill, stating he was convinced of his innocence and would spend his last dollar to prove it.

"Dad's a brick," smiled young Hill. "I knew he would stick by me."

The father also urged his boy not to resist extradition, but to "com on home and clear your name."

The extradition papers were sent from Illinois by air mail and should be in Governor Hartley's hands at Olympia today. It is believed the governor will honor the requisition papers without question. If no hitch occurs, the prisoner should be back in Streator by the end of the week.

Arrival of the Illinois officers was eagerly awaited here in order to clear up reports that the youth under arrest is not Hill. It was intimated that the prisoner might be a friend of Hill's who sought to hold the attention of police until Hill himself could make good his escape. Capt. Charles Tennant, Seattle chief of detectives, says he is positive the young man in the city jail is Hill.

VACATION DAYS END TUESDAY FOR 1,700 SCHOOL CHILDREN

Official Tabulation Expected To Increase Number Enrolled

The registration at Central High School alone was 615 in the morning and 380 at the Lincoln building.

The first teachers' meeting was held Monday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock at Central High School when Superintendent Pendry gave a brief talk. The principal's building meetings were held at 2:30 the same day.

Enrollment in the first grade this fall is particularly large, totalling 250, it is announced. Medical examination of school children in all school buildings was started Tuesday morning by all physicians of the city, and will go forward until completed.

EIGHTH VICTIM OF SLAYER'S GUN DIES FROM STRAY BULLET

Youngstown Killer Attempts Escape From Hospital

YOUNGSTOWN, O., Sept. 6.—The toll of lives taken by the pistol of Tony De Capua, who Saturday night, in a sudden fit of insanity, perpetrated the most shocking orgy of murder this city has ever known, reached eight today when Fred Gutwisky, 53, died in a hospital.

Gutwisky had no part in the affair, but was struck by a stray bullet, during the gun battle between De Capua and police. A few minutes before, De Capua, raged by unemployment and poverty, had shot to death his wife, four children and two small grandchildren, and seriously wounded his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Gladys De Capua.

As he started to reload the pistol, a police squad wagon drew up in front of the house and De Capua rushed into the front yard and met the officers. Patrol Driver Leo Tyrrell was shot in the leg and at least two spectators wounded before De Capua was himself shot in the abdomen and captured.

Police reported that De Capua made an attempt to escape from city hospital last night. A guard is maintained in his room. He refuses to answer questions, is extremely sullen and apparently demented, according to police.

Mrs. Gladys De Capua, the daughter-in-law, whose two infant children were murdered, is still in a serious condition from the wounds she sustained.

Sheriff Ohmer Tate declared Barr's resignation, while not entirely unexpected, came sooner than expected and he has not had sufficient time to appoint a successor. The position will be filled soon, he announces.

SHOOTS HUSBAND, SELF

Charges have already been filed against Kellogg and Riley.

Those to be arraigned today are Mrs. Imogene Kellogg, Detroit, wife of one of the convicts, James Waters and wife of Newark, Beaumont Sowers, Cincinnati, and George Zens, Detroit.

DRY LEADERS MOURN PASSING OF FAMOUS PROHIBITION HEAD

Complications Cause Demise—Death Came Suddenly

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., Sept. 6.—The ranks of reformers and the world at large today mourned the death of a figure unique in the history of the country, a man credited with being the moving force behind the passage of the most vehemently-discussed amendment ever added to the constitution of the United States. He was Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel and so-called generalissimo of the Anti-Saloon League, who died at a sanitarium here late yesterday afternoon from a complication of kidney trouble and heart disease.

Wheeler's body, which was taken to a local undertaking establishment, was to be removed to Columbus, Ohio, by his son and a friend, Dr. Howard Hyde, later in the day.

It was understood that Wheeler's body would be laid to rest near that of his wife in the family burial plot in Columbus, O. Mrs. Wheeler died but a few weeks ago as the result of burns received in the explosion of an oil burner at Wheeler's home in Little Pointe Sable, Mich.

Proponents of the famous dry leader say that few individual personages attracted to themselves such universal recognition through conscientious adherence to principles and convictions than Wayne B. Wheeler. For more than thirty years, he has worked for the passage of a national law which would free the nation from what he termed the "grip" of intoxicating liquors, and since the last decade of the nineteenth century, all his energies had been expended toward that end.

Worked for Dry Law.
From what appeared to be a weak, almost chimerical quasi-political doctrine, Wheeler's creed of bone-dry legislation assumed sizeable proportions in the early years of the twentieth century, and the Anti-Saloon League became a force that politics realized would have to be reckoned with. When, in 1918, the eighteenth amendment was passed by the congress of the United States, Wheeler's prognostications and hopes had been realized, and he soon came to hold the distinction of being the man who had seen a nation accept as law, the doctrine of his life.

Wheeler was born on November 10, 1869, on a small farm in Brookfield, O. It was during his boyhood on this farm, he told reporters a short time before his death, that Wheeler had first inculcated in his mind an aversion to liquor. The occasion was when a drunken farmer had rammed a pitchfork in young Wheeler's leg. He said the astounding inefficiency and carelessness of the farmhand, a good hay-tosser when sober, brought a message to him to be felt through the length and breadth of the world.

Attended Oberlin.
Wheeler received education at Oberlin College in Ohio. While a student there, he was brought to the attention of the Rev. Dr. Howard H. Russell, one of the founders of the Anti-Saloon League, who was in search of an assistant. Dr. Russell found the youth in the janitor's quarters of the college.

ACCOMPLICE OF ALLEGED AUTO THIEF HELD; HAD MASTER KEY

With the arrest of Clarence Burden, 17, this city, by Patrolman Charles Thompson Tuesday morning, police are convinced a long series of recent automobile thefts has been solved.

Burden maintains his innocence but an ignition key, similar to a master key, was found in his possession, which will operate the ignition on Chevrolets and Stars of 1924, 1925 and 1926 models.

A majority of auto thefts in the last few months has been of automobiles of these two makes, police say.

Burden's arrest resulted from the confession of Harold Miller, 16, Trumbull St., under arrest at Police Headquarters, who implicated Burden as his companion in the theft of at least two automobiles from Xenia and Wilmington residents.

Both youths are being held at Police Headquarters but their cases will probably be transferred to Juvenile Court as both are under age. Police Chief Ben South, Wilmington, and a man named Smith whose car Miller admitted having stolen during the Clinton County Fair, were to come to Xenia Tuesday to identify both boys if possible.

MEDICAL MISSIONARY HEARD AT BEAVER GRADE SCHOOL REUNION

Japan is advancing rapidly along modern lines, in many ways more rapidly than the United States, Dr. William Ankeney, recently returned from that country told visitors at the eighteenth annual reunion of former pupils and teachers of the old Beaver graded school, Monday at Beaver Reformed Church on the Dayton and Xenia Pike.

Dr. Ankeney, a medical missionary to China under the Reformed Church, was obliged to leave that country during the recent revolution, and went to Japan where he visited his brother, the Rev. Alfred Ankeney, a missionary there. He then came on here and is the guest of his father, Mr. Horace Ankeney of the Dayton Pike. He gave a short history of the Chinese revolution. Dr. Ankeney also recited a poem he learned when he was a pupil of Mrs. Ernest Bradford in the Pleasant View school, Beaver Creek Twp.

W. P. Kershner of Columbus, who is connected with the state teachers insurance bureau, gave an address in which he urged a return to the old classical education. Too much attention is being paid nowadays, the speaker said, to business education, and not enough to education of the pupil for his leisure time.

Mr. Brown, a Dayton attorney, also gave an address, in which he paid a tribute to the foundations of education that were laid in Beaver Creek Twp., as evidenced he said, by the solid structure that exists today.

The program which followed the picnic dinner, was opened by the singing of two old hymns under the leadership of the Rev. Arthur Leaming, pastor of Beaver Church. The welcome address was given by Mrs. P. H. Flynn, Miss Mary Corinto of Cincinnati, a former pupil, read an original poem, "A Tropical Tango".

Mrs. Orpha Dillingham of this city and her sister, Mrs. Newton Ledbetter, both former pupils, sang a duet "Grandmother's Advice".

Mrs. Ernest Bradford was re-elected president of the reunion association; E. H. Snyder of Dayton, vice president; Miss Rachel Ankeney, corresponding secretary; Horace Ankeney, Jr., recording secretary, and Mrs. J. A. Piper, Xenia, treasurer.

One hundred participated in the picnic dinner at noon, and about thirty more came for the afternoon program in the church auditorium.

Clarence Galliger, a former well known Xenian, died at his home in Denver, Col., several days ago, following an operation. It was learned by his father-in-law, J. H. Matthews, W. Main St.

Mr. Galliger was born in Xenia and lived here until after his marriage with Miss Flora Matthews. He had lived in the west a number of years and is survived by his widow, a daughter, and two brothers, Harry Galliger of Los Angeles, and William Galliger of Middletown.

His burial took place in Denver.

WHAT'S THE USE?

Recent tragedies of the air have excited the sympathy and horror of the world, but automobile casualties, mounting to appalling numbers, attract scarcely a momentary interest. Day by day the list grows. Sunday's total in Greene County alone was four lives.

It is to be expected that in experimental adventuring in the new field of aviation considerable numbers of pioneer leaders should die—there are so many unknown elements of risk in such enterprise, so much that remains to be done before reasonable security may be assured. But this is not the case with the automobile. This method of transportation per se is as safe as that by the old-fashioned horse-drawn vehicle. The machines are substantial, the rules for their direction and control plain and simple. There is no reason for collisions, for running down pedestrians, for tragedies at railway crossings. These accidents occur, nine times in ten, because of the fault of the drivers. Men have not ceased taking chances, they have not ceased being careless, they fatuously remain ignorant of many things they should know in connection with driving these machines; and so the tragedies mount. Daily the people are admonished, warned and instructed by newspapers, by dealers, by public organizations, but they refuse to heed—they die until the annual toll amounts to more than twenty thousand, with an injured list running into the hundreds of thousands.

For a number of weeks the Middle West has been disturbed and alarmed by a visitation of infantile paralysis; every precaution promptly was taken; professional advice to the public was comprehensive and adequate; parents became careful and watchful; apprehension was widely acute and everybody on the qui vive to do all possible to check the dangerous scourge. The deaths from this cause have been negligible, but with people, hosts of little children among them, dying daily in automobile accidents, the threat of the spread of this disease brought the public to the extreme degree of precautionary rational defensiveness. And yet, daily, thousands of them continue to court the kiss of oblivion as they go their ways on the comfortable cushions of the modern chariot of Thanatos!

Little Old New York

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Pantomime of New York at 11 o'clock at night, the theater closing hour. Subway trains are running faster and the stations are becoming more and more crowded, until they reach a peak at 11:30. Sidewalks in the theatrical district are as crowded as they ever are. Lights flash on in the night clubs. The saxophone player throws a clear note but into the cupolas as he prepares to start his evening's work. The policeman in Central Park begin their nightly rounds of ejecting the lovers. An expensive roadster draws up at the curb on Fifth Ave. and a girl, apparently waiting for a bus, climbs in. She will not walk home alone. Bookworms shut out the cupolas as he sits on the steps of the Public Library, reading with the light from the street lamps. Cross-town streets in the forties are rapidly deserted by the closely-packed rows of parked cars. A half-dozen thrilled movie fans pick out a home-going waitress as Billie Dove. Tired old women with worn-out shoes drag their weary feet along the streets, about to begin their nightly scrubbing in the theaters. Home-going Brooklynites know their rights and curse the taxi driver who plunges his car unfeelingly through a mob at a street corner. A gentleman about town, attired in evening dress drives up to a Park Ave. address in a town car, carrying a suitcase full of rye and gin which he is delivering to a house party. Word-weary movie and play reporters pound out "adequate" and "definitely" in telegraph offices for reviews in the last editions. Beggars are rearing their harvest. Grand Central is filling with commuters. Mr. S. L. Rothafel sits in his lofty chambers, consuming hot dog after hot dog as he plans bigger and better movie presentations. Ink-stained men in trousers and undershirts are sitting on the curb at Forty-third St. Times Square, resting between editions of the New York Times. Inside the air is stale with cigarette fumes as rewrite men refresh old stories for later editions. A Greenwich Village poet takes a slug of synthetic absinthe as a stimulant to his muse. A gentleman of literary ability also in the Village takes a slug of real absinthe to drown his muse. A young marcher gaily down a deserted street, and the towering granite walls of buildings echo "Ain't She Sweet?" the air thrills from his pursed lips.

Quaint spectacles in the first city of the nation:
A motor-bike weaves through heavy traffic on Broadway and pulls up smartly before the automat at Forty-sixth St. The young man at the handlebars helps the flapper on the rear seat to dismount, and together they enter the restaurant for a meal.

There is, at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth St. and Third Ave., a hotel "FOR GENTLEMEN." From the L trains, I am able to see into the second floor lobby as the cars stop at the station. It appears to be a shabby place, a duplicate of hundreds of lodging houses along the Bowery. But indubitably, it is for gentlemen only, as witness the sign on the desk, which reads: "No Guests Registered After 8 P. M."

Nassau St. seems to have had a colorful career. Looking through an old map the other day I discovered that it was once called Pig Woman's Lane (and what a shame that the tabloids didn't know this during Hall-Mills trial.) William St. was once known as "Horse and Cart Lane," and Broad St. went under the titles of "Bath Sheep Pastures" and "High Ditch."

Household Hints

By Mrs. Mary Morton

MENU HINT
In the following luncheon or supper menu a good combination vegetable salad recipe is given. These raw vegetables may be combined in endless variety, using ingredients that give the right colors to carry out a color scheme, if that is what you wish, or merely to look appetizing. Pimientos, tomatoes, carrots, sweet red peppers, all give a bit of contrasting, vivid color.

Bacon
Combination Vegetable Salad
Popovers
Custard Pie
Tea

Today's Recipes
Popovers—One cup flour, one-fourth teaspoon salt, seven-eighths cup milk, two eggs, one-half teaspoon melted butter. Mix salt and flour and add milk gradually. Add beaten eggs and butter and beat with the egg beater for two minutes. Put in hot gem pans and bake in hot oven thirty to thirty-five minutes.

Combination Vegetable Salad—One cup shredded lettuce, one-half cup grated raw carrot, one-fourth cup diced green sweet pepper, one cup diced celery or cucumber, two cups diced boiled potatoes, salt, mayonnaise. Arrange on platter in layers, adding mayonnaise as you arrange it putting pinches of carrot and pepper here and there to give a pleasing dash of color. Bits of red radishes also give a pleasing appearance.

Popovers—Two cups flour, one tablespoon butter, one cup milk, two teaspoons baking powder, a little sugar if you choose. Bake in gem pans.

Cellulose—Is a form of carbohydrate valuable in nutrition because it adds to the bulk of the matter passing through the intestines—roughage. In some vegetables there is a large amount of cellulose.

SUGGESTIONS
Buttons
Heavy crochet cotton is the best thing to use when sewing on the buttons on the children's clothes. It will stand any amount of resistance before it will give way.

Makes Handle
Lay a piece of clean, strong string, about six inches long, over the top of each jar of jelly before pouring in the paraffin. Then pour in the paraffin and let it harden over the cord. When you use the jelly just by taking hold of each end of the string and pulling, the paraffin will slip out easily.

Cleans Walls
A bag of cotton flannel large enough to fit over the broom is the best article in the world to clean ceilings and high walls. As soon as it is the least bit soiled it can be removed washed and put back again.

FRESH FRUIT COBBLER
(Mrs. Mary Morton's Daily Food Recipe)
One tablespoon butter, one-half cup milk, one teaspoon baking powder, one egg, one cup sugar, one-fourth teaspoon salt, one cup flour, fresh fruit. Place inverted cup in pan, put sweetened fruit (apples, peaches, plums, for instance), around it and pour in the batter. Bake one-half hour in moderate oven and turn out on plate. The juice from the fruit gathers under the cup, thus preventing a soggy dessert.

MAN TAKES POISON.
INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 6.—William Coniff, 26, Cincinnati, is in the City Hospital tonight suffering from poison taken, he told police, because he had failed to gain reconciliation with his wife. He drank the poison at his wife's home here when she refused to talk with him, he said.

COINCIDENCE.

Most people, if not superstitious, are at least willing to come halfway to accept what isn't true. We are easily led into interpreting mere coincidence in terms of cause and effect.

An investigation at Leland Stanford university disclosed that three-fourths of 1,286 men and women students believed they had experienced the "feeling of being stared at."

An elaborate series of experiments in the Leland Stanford psychological laboratory showed conclusively that any belief in this feeling of being stared at must be entirely groundless. It is possible to figure out by mathematics, according to laws of probability, whether an event may be explained by chance.

Maybe you think of somebody whom you haven't seen in years and as you turn the corner, there he is! But consider all the folk you think of but do not meet as you turn the corner.

Occasionally, the item of coincidence is so hidden as to be altogether misleading. At Lake Placid, one summer, I listened to a talk by the late James H. Hyslop, then heard of the Society of Psychical Research. Now, Hyslop was a thoroughly sincere investigator, having not the slightest desire to perpetrate or perpetuate any form of fraud. He welcomed any new facts pertaining to his subject. So, at the close of his lecture, I sought him out and told him about a little psychic experience of my own.

"While you were talking," I said, "I visualized a man who looked like you, only much younger, in the act of sending a telegram, announcing the death of his father. It was sent to the father's sister, in a distant state, and she was requested to notify another sister, living a few miles from her in the country. This message, according to the impression I have, was carried to the sister in the country by a boy on a bicycle."

"And now," I asked, "has all that any significance? Why should I think of such things while listening to a talk by you? Did your father die some years ago, and did you send a message to a sister in another state? And could your message have been carried to the country by a boy on a bicycle?"

"Yes," he replied, "it all tallies exactly with the facts. Such a message was sent to a sister in Ohio, and it undoubtedly was carried to the country by some one, probably a boy on the bicycle."

"And," I inquired, "how do you explain my getting a flash of such an incident? Was it psychic, spiritualistic, telepathic, or what?"

"I have no theory," he replied. "The fact is, I have no theory about many of the phenomena that we find in these investigations."

By that time my conscience began to prick me, for Hyslop took his work too seriously to have it made the subject of a practical joke. I confessed that here was a simple explanation of the whole thing.

I had been the boy on the bicycle.

band to be an eye witness to your entire beauty regime than it is for you to follow him downtown to see just how he makes his money. So my advice is don't force personal details on your husband's attention.

That really leaves you rather limited in the time you can devote to beauty. At night your husband will be home and you must give your thoughts to his comfort and relaxation. In the morning, you will be getting him his breakfast and you should spend your extra time getting into something neat and attractive so that he will have an attractive vision of you to carry through the day. You probably will not find a large chunk of time you can take out of your day to devote to beauty, but there are sure to be moments you can make count. It really is not necessary to keep your face cream on a great length of time, if you keep it on twenty minutes while you are planning your menus or peeling vegetables, you will have practically the same benefits you would in retaining it over night.

The skin can absorb about all it is capable of in that length of time. The same with your astringent balsams and jellies for firming the contour and with your chin straps—you can find slices of time during the day when keeping these beautifying agents on will not interfere with your work. There is a balsam and a Roman jelly that will be absorbed right into the skin and can be used at any time during the day.

But the most important thing for the home woman, as for every woman, is to get the beauty habit of mind. Then she will rinse her hands with lemon and massage her scalp just as a matter of course.

My next talk will be Beauty Time for the Woman of Much Leisure.

NOT A BARGAIN AFTER ALL

POTTSTOWN, Pa.—George Lapas who conducts a hot wienner shop, purchased a safe for $10 and was delighted at the bargain. When the safe was installed, however, he recalled that he had neglected to ask the combination. After experimenting for some time, he summoned a lock expert, who presented him a bill for $21.50.

ACIDOPHILUS MILK.

Mrs. H.—Milk soured with the acidophilus germs undoubtedly is of considerable value in ousting the putrefactive type of germs from the intestinal tract. It is used quite extensively in various disorders. An exclusive diet of this milk for three or four days, or longer, and then the inclusion of a quart, or perhaps a pint a day, in the diet, is recommended.

The manufacturers of the acidophilus cultures which are put up in candy form (with sweetened agar blocks covered with chocolate) say there are as many of the acidophilus germs in one candy block as in one pint of the acidophilus milk. Naturally, these candy blocks do not contain the other valuable qualities of milk. However, if you cannot get the acidophilus milk and can get the candy blocks and take a pint of regular milk every day, you would probably get the same benefits as from the acidophilus milk.

You say you are very thin. Have you had an examination by a competent physician to see what is the cause of your trouble? Better send for our pamphlet on gaining weight. (Enclose 10 cents in stamps with a fully self-addressed, stamped envelope.) We have had wonderful reports from its use.

I have never heard of any vermifuge for gaining weight. Certainly vermifuge should not be taken unless there are worms, and then under the direction of a physician.

Goiters.
I am not infrequently gently chided for paying so much attention to the Friendly Pat Fraternity, but I continue to do so. Certainly, if you know of nothing I can do in public health education that is more effective in disease prevention. Besides a reducing course is one that can be home-managed. And many of those who write to me want help on diseases that should be under the constant supervision of a physician. Naturally, I always have to recommend that you have periodic health examinations by your physician in all cases, sick or well.

E. wants me to talk more on exophthalmic goiters. She says there are almost as many of us as there are of the F. F. E. While goiter (especially the simple type that is but an enlargement of the thyroid gland without disease symptoms), is fairly common, it isn't nearly so common as overweight is, E.; and exophthalmic goiter, which really is a serious disease, while not rare, is not common.

In simple goiter the thyroid gland is believed to be deficient in iodine, and this may be due to a lack of iodine in the foods. Simple goiter is noticeably prevalent in districts where the land has been leached of its iodine, the so-called goiter belts. This type is often cured and prevented by iodine medication, either in the form of iodized salt or tablets or simple iodine, but the dosage should be supervised by the physician.

Simple goiter can also be caused by a diet that interferes with the absorption of iodine. McCarrison found that by feeding animals with too much fat he could produce goiter. Putrefactive conditions in the intestines might cause non-absorption.

The exophthalmic goiters are altogether different, and one who has this type of goiter has an acute disease. In this type, it is believed there is too much thyroid secretion. Physicians do give a course of medication for it, but usually this type of goiter has to be removed surgically. The cause is not fully known, but unhygienic living and wrong diet are undoubtedly factors.

We have an article which goes into the subject a little more in detail. Enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope with request.

I Have Said in My Heart

BY IDAH MCGLONE GIBSON.

FASHION.
The fashion experts are out with the information that brown and gray are to be the coming colors for fall. Consequently, while it is probable that we will see more of these colors than any others during the coming month, no girl need worry because she must wear some other color.

The manufacturers have probably had their heads making webs of these colors both in silks and wools, all spring and summer, for although there is a pleasing fiction that fashion is something born of woman's caprice, it is in reality a hard and fact factor in commercial life.

France has always recognized this. Ever since the enactment of the sumptuary laws, the laws of fashion have not been the moods of women, but necessities of commerce.

New colors, new textiles, must be made from time to time, so that the wheels of business be kept moving.

Those who know this and have known it for hundreds of years, depend upon the one great psychological law—"There is nothing changeless in this world but change," and they try to find the moment when the faded votary of fashion becomes tired of style that is and is looking for a style that will be new. Then having decided that the time is right, they change—a little.

Fashion is never radical. It does not push its way past all obstacles; rather it creeps slowly around them.

Do you older women remember how long it took for women to become accustomed to the low, small hats now universally worn? They began to creep in before the war, and even today Queen Mary and many other women still perch confections of flowers and ribbons on the top of their heads.

But to get back to brown and gray for the color of your new winter costume.

Brown is a warmer color than gray, especially the red browns which are already seen in the shops.

It looks better on the brown-eyed girl than one with eyes of blue.

Brown is seldom becoming to black-eyed girls. It does not combine well with other colors; so unless you can have many accessories all of a variation of tint, brown is an expensive color.

A woman must be pretty sure she is pretty if she wears gray. The color is good on red-haired girls whose brilliant color needs subduing.

It can, however, be combined with black, yellow, blue, pink, or in fact any other color except brown, and so made wearable by all ages and complexions.

Memo:—Be sure and study not only your inclination but your personality before buying your winter's wardrobe.

What a tangle life seems sometimes! Hardly worth living. We would just like to cut loose and go to the moon or the "Never, Never, Never Land," or somewhere where things would be different. My private guess is, however, that we'd be glad to get back and tackle the same old problems with a vim.

That is just what is the matter with the discouraged little wife who writes me the following letter:

"Dear Mrs. Lee: I am a woman 24 years old and have been married almost six years and have a child 20 months old. We live in the city and I am getting anxious to go back to my home in the south. My husband works in a factory and doesn't seem like he wants to go back. He says he does but doesn't write anything to his folks about it and don't make any arrangements to go. We lived on a farm the first two years we were married and I felt satisfied. It seems that he loves me at times and other times he doesn't. He takes me any place I want to go and other times he comes in and reads the paper and won't say much to either of us. Then I get the blues."

"The first two years I husked corn and helped him all I could on the farm and worked in the factory after we came to town until the baby was born, and did my own washing and have kept her most of the time since, but he doesn't seem to appreciate it. I'm too old-fashioned to suit his sisters. They use lipstick and arch their eyebrows and dress fine."

If the middle-aged widow who wrote me some time ago and signed "Sad Eyes" will send me her real name and address in confidence I will send her the names and addresses of a number of people who will be only too glad to have her make her home with them. I have her letter, but no name and address that would reach her.

Auto Races Draw 2,000 Fans To Fairground

TWO DRIVERS CRASH THROUGH FENCE BUT SPEEDERS NOT HURT

Tom Wall, Greencastle, Pa., Wins Lion's Share Of Track Honors

Fully 2,000 persons witnessed automobile races at the Greene County Fairgrounds Labor Day afternoon under the sponsorship of Guy Wade, promoter.

The drivers made rather slow time over the half-mile dirt oval but the races were considered a success. Only two small mishaps marred the pastime. Ray Brehm drove his racer through the outer fence at a turn in the opening race but the driver was not injured and the car not damaged.

Phil Malaney crashed through the inner guard rail in the second race, losing control of the car while negotiating a sharp curve at high speed. Malaney was unhurt but his yellow racer was slightly damaged.

Tom Wall, youthful speed king from Greencastle, Pa., won the lion's share of honors during the afternoon in his Frontenac. Wall, the dare devil type, besides making the best time in qualifying heat of two laps, won three of the four races for professional dirt track drivers, winning every race in which he was entered.

In the qualifications, six drivers qualified in time of thirty-eight seconds or better for the half-mile. Wall sped around the oval in thirty-three seconds. Other drivers to qualify were Joe Malaney, thirty-four seconds; C. C. Johnson, Hugh Arnold and Ed Sipp, thirty-five seconds, and Ray Brehm, thirty-eight seconds.

Tom Wall won the first event, the Australian Pursuit Race, in quick fashion. This race was run with four cars, each placed at equal distances around the track. At the drop of the starter's flag they were off and the object was to catch and pass the car immediately ahead. As soon as a car is overtaken, that car must pull off to the side and quit. To win the race, one car must pass all of the others.

In this event, Wall never got started, a second smashed into the fence, and Wall quickly overtook and passed the third after four laps had been covered.

Wall also won the second event, a five-mile match race between three professional drivers representing Ohio, Pennsylvania and Indiana. Wall represented Pennsylvania and won in the record-breaking time of five and one-half minutes. C. C. Johnson, for Indiana, trailed all the way. Malaney, the third entrant, crashed through a fence on the first turn of the opening lap.

Ed Sipp won the third event, limited to the three cars which qualified in thirty-five seconds. Sipp reeled off the ten laps in six minutes flat. C. C. Johnson was second while Hugh Arnold dropped out.

The fourth event, restricted to stock cars from Greene and surrounding counties, a free-for-all race, proved a fizzle because of few entries. Three cars were entered, two privately owned, and the five-mile jaunt was won by Harold Penewit, of Ankeney and Weaver, in a Chrysler. His two competitors, Henry Roan, colored, in a stripped-down Dodge, and Fred Scurry, driving a Ford, quit after several laps. Penewit finished the race alone in the fast time of six minutes, forty seconds.

The closing event, a five-mile handicap race, developed the keenest competition of the afternoon and furnished plenty of thrills. Four drivers started, Ray Brehm, C. C. Johnson, Ed Sipp and Tom Wall, and were handicapped in the order named.

Wall won the event from Johnson after closing a wide gap. Johnson drove a heady race and managed to keep in front of the Greencastle youth for eight laps. On the ninth lap, Wall passed him at the turn and won easily.

Promoter Guy Wade acted as starter with Diver Belden, auto club secretary, as judge, and Lawrence Purdom, announcer. A number of checkers and timers also occupied the judge's stand.

REV. TILFORD WILL HEAD MINISTERS

The Rev. William H. Tilford, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, was elected president of the Xenia Ministerial Association Monday to succeed the Rev. V. F. Brown, D. D., who is resigning as pastor of Trinity M. E. Church.

The Rev. D. A. Sellers, pastor of the First Reformed Church was elected vice president, and the Rev. H. B. McElree, secretary and treasurer. The association discussed plans for the union evangelistic services which open for three weeks at the First M. E. Church, September 18, with the Rev. W. E. Beiderwolf, evangelist.

AUTO DAMAGED IN COLLISION HERE

The radiator on a roadster occupied by two girls, whose names were not learned, was damaged in a rear-end collision with a truck of the Springfield Dairy Products Co., 145 Hill St., driven by Dorsey Nichols, employee, at Detroit and Second Sts., Tuesday morning at 11:45 o'clock.

Witnesses declared the truck driver had signaled for a left-hand turn at the intersection, and that the roadster failed to observe the signal, the car skidding and crashing into the rear of the truck. No one was injured. Both the truck and roadster were going north on Detroit St.

BOWERSVILLE BAYLIFFS BEAT WAYNESVILLE, LOOP LEADERS

Bowersville Bayliffs are making a clean sweep on their last circuit of the Triangle League. Having defeated Jamestown 3 to 2, the Bayliffs finally won a game from Waynesville Sunday, the score being 14 to 2.

Bowersville started its bombardment in the second inning and never ceased. In the second Cox sent a line drive between center and left, out of the playing field, good for a homer.

In the third, with two down and the bases filled, D. Murrell cut loose with a double scoring two runs, and E. Haughey drove in another with a single. Bowersville then took an inning to reload its bats, then cut loose again in the sixth. With two on Smith sent a triple to right center, and scored himself a minute later when V. Haughey singled.

GOLFERS TAKE PART IN LABOR DAY PLAY AT COUNTRY CLUB

Taking advantage of the perfect holiday weather, men and women golfers swarmed the Xenia Country Club links both morning and afternoon on Labor Day.

Play in the qualifying rounds for the annual men's fall "scratches" tournament was begun Monday and a number of players turned in scores that will probably make them eligible to compete in the approaching first round of match play next week. Various handicaps of players will receive no consideration in this tourney.

Golfers may play their qualifying rounds of eighteen holes any day this week.

Club members were served luncheon at the clubhouse at noon. A Lawrence Landaker was chairman of the committee of women members, which had the luncheon in charge.

In the afternoon a mixed tourney was held, open to both men and women. First prize was won by A. H. Finley, paired with Mrs. Rachel Kelly. Second honors went to E. H. Heathman and Mrs. W. C. Craig, while Frederick Flynn and Mrs. Eber Reynolds were awarded third prize. About thirty men and women players participated in the mixed tournament.

WAYNESVILLE SETS TRIANGLE LOOP PAGE

Waynesville continues to set the pace in the Triangle League, but its margin over the second place Wilmington nine was reduced to one full game by Sunday's games.

Waynesville lost to Bowersville while Wilmington was sharing a double-header with Springfield Valley, winning the first contest 4 to 1 and dropping the nightcap 3 to 2. Jamestown trounced Bellbrook in the other Triangle League game by a score of 6 to 3.

HOLD XENIAN FOR STARTING TROUBLE

Thomas Jordan, 45, 746 W. Second St., is being held in the County Jail awaiting arraignment in Probate Court on a probable charge of intoxication, following his arrest at the home of his brother-in-law, Abraham Free, in Beavercreek Twp., five miles northwest of Xenia, by Sheriff Ohmer Tate and Deputy Sheriff George Sugden late Monday night.

Jordan who was accompanied by his wife to Free's residence, is alleged to have started a family quarrel. Sheriff Tate was told that Jordan began breaking up the household furnishings and created such a disturbance that Free finally intervened and knocked him down, rendering him unconscious for a time.

Free then summoned the officers. Unless Free signs an affidavit charging a more serious offense, Jordan will be charged with intoxication.

Sour Stomach

"Phillips Milk of Magnesia"
Better than Soda

Instead of soda hereafter take a little "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" in water any time for indigestion or sour, acid, gassy stomach, and relief will come instantly. For fifty years genuine "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it overcomes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. It neutralizes acid fermentations in the bowels and gently urges the souring waste from the system without purging. Besides, it is more pleasant to take than soda. Insist upon "Phillips." Twenty-five cent and fifty cent bottles, any drugstore. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. Registered Trade Mark of The Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor, Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

XENIA GOLFERS TO PLAY MIDDLETOWN

Golfers of the Xenia Country Club, undefeated in the three inter-city golf matches played this summer, will attempt to preserve this record in the concluding match of the season at Middletown Wednesday afternoon.

Xenia defeated Middletown in a close match over the local course earlier in the season, but the handicap of playing on a strange links will be reversed this time.

Twenty-five golfers are expected to compose the Xenia team, which will make the trip to Middletown. The match will start promptly at 1 o'clock.

COACH KOLB BACK

Coach Victor Kolb, of Central High School, returned to Xenia Friday after being connected with a boys' camp during the summer months in the east.

Coach Kolb will probably issue his first call for football candidates early this week starting with "skull" practice at first and instructions in the fundamentals of the game, because the hot weather will probably not permit actual field work for a few days.

SUGGESTS THREE WEEKS.

DETROIT, MICH.—A woman failed to make a happy choice of an alias name when she was arrested by a patrolman on a charge of being drunk. When Judge John U. Brennan asked her what her name was she said: Elinor Glynn. "If that's the case, the only thing to do is to give you three weeks," said the judge as he sentenced her to the house of correction. She is probably cured of using the name of the author of "Three Weeks."

BRITISH HELP STOP

PIRACY AT HOWCHOW

HONG KONG, Sept. 6.—A British naval squadron and a detachment of Cantonese troops were reported today to have co-operated in stamping out piracy at Howchow.

Eighteen shells were fired into the village of Shekhi, where the Chinese freebooters landed their loot. The residents of Taipinghu, whence the pirates came, were ordered to evacuate the town and British sailors then fired the water-front. Both Shekhi and Taipinghu were virtually deserted today, it was reported.

The Theater

If Eric Von Stroheim, the German adventurer and soldier of fortune who has worked his way into the top-notch of motion picture production has his way, the public will soon see a nineteen reel movie.

When Von Stroheim finished production on "The Wedding March," the picture was found to be twenty-five reels long. After eliminating the only scenes that could be eliminated the picture was still nineteen reels long.

Paramount, it is said, wanted the film cut to feature but Von Stroheim balked. Then it was suggested that the picture be made into two separate stories but this, also wouldn't do.

"The Flag Pole Sitter" is the name of a picture to be made by Universal. Guess what it is about.

Paramount is ready in case Adolphe Menjou breaks with the organization. The producers are said to have lined up Wilfred Lucas, called a dead ringer for Menjou, and he is being groomed as a type sophisticate.

FARMER WOMAN IN OKLAHOMA

Praises Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Because It Gave Her Health and Strength

In a sunny pasture in Oklahoma, a herd of sleek cows was grazing. They made a pretty picture. But the thin woman in the blue checked apron who looked at them was tired of cows, tired of her tedious work in the dairy. She was tired of cooking for a household of boarders, besides caring for her own family. The burdens of life seemed too heavy for her falling health. She had lost confidence in herself.

One day she began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and her general health began to improve. She took it faithfully. Now she can do her work without any trouble, sleeps well and is no longer blue and tired.

This woman, Mrs. Cora Short, R. 9, Box 387, Oklahoma City, Okla., writes: "Everybody now signs 'Mrs. Short, what are you doing to yourself?' I weigh 135 and my weight before I took it was 115. I have taken seven bottles of the Vegetable Compound."

FUN FOR THE WHOLE FAMILY

Peter's Adventures

BY
MRS. FLORENCE
SMITH

IN THE BEGINNING

Jack-in-the-Box settled himself comfortably by Peter's side, rested his head upon the ground, and for a moment was so still that the Boy thought he, too, was going to take a nap.

"THAT SALT WATER TURTLE THAT HAD THE MOST FUN!"

"Of course, he has to pay for it!" said Tortoise, suddenly, and shut his jaws with a snap so loud that Peter jumped.

"Who had to pay and for what?" demanded the Boy. "What are you talking about?"

"About something you've been teasing me to tell you for a long, long while!" Tortoise grinned and wiggled his toes. "And now that I have made a beginning with my tale of the Three Cousins, you interrupt me by asking foolish questions."

Peter looked bewildered.

"Foolish questions!" repeated he. "Well, if you call it foolish to want to know who's who and what's what in a story, then I can't imagine what you would call sensible. Besides, who ever heard of starting a tale in the middle. Begin at the beginning, why don't you? That's the proper way."

Tortoise turned and stared at the Boy.

"Hum! A youngster Two-Legs like you trying to tell an old-timer like myself how to do things! Why, I have told stories years and years and years before you were born. However, since it is you who is to listen, you might as well have things your own way. After all, perhaps you're right. Since this is a story of the beginning of Turtle history, it ought to begin at the beginning. Let's see! Where was I?"

"You were not anywhere at all," declared Peter, shortly. "That's just the trouble. All you said was 'He had to pay for it!' When do you mean?"

"I mean the Cousin who went to sea," replied Jack-in-the-Box. "You see, of the three, 'twas Salt Water Turtle that had the most fun of it in the beginning. He went the furthest, saw the strangest sights and met the most people. He grew to be the strongest, too, and his shell became as tough as leather and his flesh so strong that not many Two-Legs would fancy it for food. Any one would think that he was the most fortunate fellow, but he had to pay for all these good things—and he did it with his life."

Next—"Turtle Keeps His Promise."

Sally's Shoulders

HER MAN "HONEY LOU" THE HOLLYWOOD GIRL, ETC.

by BEATRICE BURTON, Author of

READ THIS FIRST:

SALLY JEROME is the mainstay of her family in the absence of her father, who does not live with her mother. MRS. JEROME enjoys poor health so Sally does the housework mornings and office work afternoons. BEAU and MILLIE, her brother and sister, give nothing towards the upkeep of the home.

TED SLOAN is in love with Sally and wants her to marry him and keep on working. But the only man who suggests her is JOHN NYE, for whom Millie works. He is blindly infatuated with Millie, who says he would make her a good husband; but in the meantime she is having a love affair with a bond salesman named DAVIDSON, whose affection for her is not very great.

WIDE MILLIE is ill with appendicitis. Sally works for John Nye, and he offers her a permanent place in his office. But Sally, hurt by something that Millie says he said about her, refuses the position and goes into the window ten business with her AUNT EMILY JEROME.

The business does not prosper until Aunt Em hires a jazz band and Sally puts on a nightly exhibition dance with Ted Sloan for dancing partner—all this to the horror of Mrs. Jerome, who has brought the whole family to live at Aunt Em's, including Beau's new wife, MABEL. Beau does nothing but pile up dishonorable debts, and Sally once more finds herself with the entire family to support, except for an occasional check from her father.

A coldness springs up between Millie and John Nye. Millie says it is because Nye is so jealous of Davidson. One night Nye comes out to the taxi and comes upon Sally in the arms of Ted Sloan. He goes away without a word, to the bewilderment of Sally. That night Ted admits that he is ashamed of dancing publicly, and after that Sally dances all alone. Mabel's baby is born, and shortly afterward Beau starts running around nights. Mabel decides he has too much freedom and plans to go to work to furnish a home of her own, while Sally tends the baby. She gets a position in John Nye's office after Millie leaves it—because, so she says, John Nye insulted her with his attentions. Later she goes to work in Davidson's office. Mr. Jerome returns home very sick, and one afternoon Sally and her mother hear him groan and then fall out of bed. (NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY)

CHAPTER LVI

SALLY thought that her father was dead when she found him lying on the floor, and his hands and face were the same shade as the bathrobe of gray Turkish toweling that was wrapped around him.

"He must have tried to get out of bed by himself," she walked aloud, although there was no one in the darkened room with her. Mrs. Jerome, who avoided all unpleasant things as she would have avoided the black plague, did not follow her at the sound of that heavy fall.

She had stayed behind in the hall, waiting for Sally to go and find out what had happened, all by herself. Sally lifted her father to the bed. He was singularly light and easy for her to pick up in her strong, young arms.

"Poor Dad," thought Sally, and as she held him, she suddenly felt closer to him than ever she had since the long-ago days when he had been a gay and chipper young man who had taken her to picture shows and the circus.

It seemed to her that she had forgotten how much she had loved him, all through those years, when he had left all of them alone to shift for themselves. But now it came surging back to her—that love for him. The love she had had for him when she was 9 years old.

She was crying softly as she picked up the telephone on the stand beside the bed, and gave Dr. Ambleside's number.

While she was speaking to him her father's eyelids fluttered up and he looked at her. His hands moved, locking themselves on his thin chest. Sally gave a great sigh of relief.

"Guess I must have got a little faint," he murmured thickly as she hung up the receiver and turned to him. "I thought I'd get up to get a drink of water. The thermos bottle was empty."

"My fault!" Sally blamed herself. It was the first time she had forgotten to keep the bottle filled with the special mineral water that Dr. Ambleside had ordered for Mr. Jerome.

But, somehow, it was easy to forget important things lately in The House by the Side of the Road. For there were so many, many things for Sally to do, and all of them important ones. The baby to be fed, bathed and tenderly watched from morning till night. Mr. Jerome to be cared for almost as carefully as the baby had to be cared for. Mrs. Jerome to be waited on, hand, foot and finger, all day long.

"And besides that, there's the down stairs work—and the dancing," thought Sally, hurrying down to the kitchen with the empty thermos bottle in her hands.

Today there had been an extra job. Aunt Em had decided she ought to have a new costume for the new dance—the Savannah Stomp. And so Sally had "thrown together" a gay gypsy costume of cheap, bright-colored calico, all sewed with little bells. She had planned to stitch it neatly late that night, when she could carry the electric sewing machine down into the dining room, where the noise of it would disturb no one.

It took her hours these days to do all the things that had to be done. "And then," said Sally to herself, "I never get caught up somehow."

With the bottle filled she rushed upstairs to give her father his drink of water, and to reassure her mother that he was all right.

But Sally, herself, was not at all sure that he was all right. He was so quiet and listless, somehow, as if he did not care whether he was alive or not.

For days she had been growing more worried about him, and her worry was reflected in her mirror-like face when she opened the door to Dr. Ambleside at 6 o'clock.

In the restaurant the three musicians who constituted Aunt Em's "jazz band" were tuning up. Aunt Em was giving Hilda, the waitress, several orders her high-pitched voice. Upstairs the baby was wailing for no reason at all except that it was a baby and got tired of exercise by trying with all its might.

The front door opened and Millie came flying into the house, bringing the freshness of the rain with her. She banged the door behind her and called out: "Well, I've had to quit 'ANOTHER job' in a loud, shrill voice before she caught sight of the doctor, who was halfway up the stairs.

"I think I'll go with them, too," Millie said, "if you'll lend me the money."

He stopped, frowning down at her. Then he turned to Sally, who was just behind him.

"I asked you people to keep Mr. Jerome perfectly quiet," he said in that terrifying, solemn voice that doctors have. "Is this the way you do it?" He was plainly angry at the way his orders had not been carried out.

Sniveling and shaking his head, he went into the sick room, smartly closing the door in Sally's face.

She stood, staring at it perplexedly for a moment. Then she turned and ran lightly down the stairs to ask the three musicians not to play that night.

Millie was in the room she had been sharing with Sally ever since her father's return, when Sally hurried into it and began to strip off the gypsy costume, garment by garment.

"Our Dad sick again?" asked Millie, in the polite tones of a person asking after a neighbor's health. Millie had no affection for her father.

"How can I love him when I don't know him?" she had asked Sally several times. "He seems like a perfect stranger to me—after staying away from us all these years."

Tonight she was absent-minded and paid little attention to Sally's answer. She took off her wet raincoat and tossed it into a corner of the room.

Then she sat down on the floor and peeled off her wet silk stockings and threw them after the raincoat. If Millie ever hung anything up it was by accident.

Perhaps that was Sally's fault. Sally, who went behind her like a lady's maid, picking up the things she dropped, washing out her soiled silk stockings, cleaning her hair brushes, putting the lids on her boxes of flesh-colored, violet-scented face powder. Sally, who had spoiled her for years and years.

It was Sally now who picked up the wet clothing and hung it over the back of a chair to dry, and then handed her a clean, white Hoover apron to put on.

"Why did you quit your job?" she asked, as she watched Millie slip into the apron and brush the wide, soft waves of golden hair down over her ears.

Before Millie had time to answer there came a sharp knock on the door, and then Dr. Ambleside's voice asking for Sally.

Sally went into the hall.

"Is there any place in this house where I can have two minutes' talk with you?" he asked, still frowning. Sally led him down the stairs and down the hall to Aunt Em's tiny office. It was dark and empty at this time of day.

They went in, and Sally turned on the desk lamp and closed the door. "Now, then," began the doctor, "your father has got to have peace and quiet, as I've been telling you. He can't get them in this house, evidently. He's been through a hard sickness, and he's got to be built up by the right kind of food and quiet and rest. It's too bad he can't get away somewhere—on a sea voyage, for instance. Not now, of course, but in a couple of weeks, when he's stronger. Or to the mountains."

Sally's blue eyes were wide and thoughtful as she took in his words. . . . Sea voyages . . . mountains. They were just words to her, poor as she always had been.

And now here was Dr. Ambleside, actually telling her that perhaps they were the things that would cure her father of the bodily ills that had brought him, so listless and lifeless, to the bed upstairs.

"A sea voyage . . . mountains . . . money," she said to herself. "Money . . . Everything comes back to money, money, money." It was the root, not only of all evil, as the proverb said—but of many other things besides. Health and happiness, for instance.

"Could you go with him?" Dr. Ambleside was asking now. He had taken care of Mrs. Jerome for so many years that he knew how useless and helpless she would be as a nurse for a sick man.

Sally shook her head. "I couldn't," she faltered. "There's so much to do here. I couldn't. But I think I could get the money together for Mother and him to go away somewhere. In two weeks or so, you say?"

She had only the faintest notion as to where she was going to get the money. That vague notion had to do with Aunt Emily and the family album, where Aunt Emily hid some of her savings.

"And lately we've really been making money," Sally said to herself on her way upstairs, after the doctor had gone. "Maybe Aunt Em will advance me some, and let me pay it back a little at a time."

She opened the door of her room and went in. Millie was standing beside the dresser, fingering the perfume bottles and lip-sticks and eyebrow pencils that covered her side of the marble top. She had just finished making up her face, and it was as artificial looking as a French doll's when she looked up at Sally.

"What did the old pill shooter want?" she asked in her liquid drawl. "Oh, he says Dad's got to get away to the mountains or for an ocean voyage or something like that," answered Sally, picking up the parts of her new gypsy costume to hang them away in the clothes closet.

"What's that stuff?" asked Millie, brightly, swinging around from the mirror. The new dress you're making to dance in?" Millie was always more interested in new clothes than she was in anything else—except new men.

"Cute!" she cried admiringly, holding up the gray flannel skirt, with its edge of little gilt bells. "Darling! Well, what are you going to do about Dad? You told the doctor we haven't any money for trips like that, didn't you? Dad ought to be in the hospital, anyway. It's such a bother having him around the house. We have to be so quiet, and I can't use the extension in his room the way I used to."

Before Mr. Jerome had come home Millie had done most of her very private telephoning from the extension in that room. And she missed it.

"Oh, I think I can get Aunt Em to lend us enough money to send Dad and Mother somewhere," Sally answered her. "It's too bad I can't go along, too. Dad needs a nurse, and Mother's not very strong."

"Well, I think I'll just go with them, then!" Millie broke in, abruptly. "If you'll lend me the money when you get son from Aunt Em, I've had a row with David and I'm not going to work in the same office with him anymore, anyhow! So I might just as well go along with the folks. I'm a wonderful nurse!"

She had never nursed so much as a single sick kitten in all her life, let alone a human being! But Sally knew that, in some way, Millie would manage to go along as Mr. Jerome's nurse. Millie always went where she wanted to go, just as she always got what she wanted, and did what she wanted to do.

DRY LEADERS MOURN PASSING OF FAMOUS PROHIBITION HEAD

for young Wheeler was helping to pay his way through college by taking care of the building. He also sold books, peddled rug-making machines and taught rural schools during vacations.

Wheeler did not jump at the proposition Dr. Russell offered him, for at that tender age, he had not thought seriously of making temperance or prohibition work a career. However, after careful consideration, and probably remembering the pitchfork episode, he accepted.

That was in May, 1893, and from that day until the day of his death, Wheeler served the organization. He rose gradually through all the ranks of the league organization, withstanding many bitter attacks and weathering the days when the exhortations of its workers fell upon the ears of a world none too willing to listen.

Was Legal Light.

Wheeler made a special study of the legal side of prohibition, a phase that became of great importance with the ramifications of the dry war. Wheeler found himself pitted against such a political figure as Mark Hanna when he was striving to muster enough supporters to make prohibition a national issue. It was at that time that Hanna said to him:

"Young man, your kind of people are all right at a prayer meeting, but they are no good at a caucus."

Whereupon Wheeler replied: "Well, sir, we will see."

The outcome was a defeat of the Hanna candidate for the Ohio senate.

In the years that followed the adoption of the eighteen amendment, Wheeler directed the national political activities as well as the legal affairs of the league. He figured prominently in the drafting of the Volstead act and in selecting the legislator whose name the famous statute bears. Wheeler's death was sudden. He was stricken some weeks ago, but had been in the sanitarium only three days. At three o'clock yesterday afternoon Wheeler was apparently well and in good spirits. He was sitting up in bed reading. He suddenly lurched forward, as the nurse, physician and members of his family were at the bedside. An examination showed he had died instantly when the attack came.

Dr. Lloyd C. Verity announced that Wheeler's death was caused by a heart attack aggravated by kidney trouble.

The Queen Anne HOME HEATER

Heats 20 to 100 Per Cent More Space

The Queen Anne's 20% to 100% greater space heating capacity is obtained through a scientific and proper balance between the three essentials of a good heating plant: grate surface, radiating surface and free air space.

To take cue of the greater heat developed by the Queen Anne's larger grate area, 6,132 square inches of heat-radiating surface are provided.

To move and circulate with rapidity the resulting greater amount of heat so released, a larger space for the free passage of air (free air space) is provided. Air is drawn in from underneath and passes upward around ALL FOUR SIDES—instead of but three as in other heaters.

The first genuine warm air furnace to be successfully built into a beautiful period cabinet was the Queen Anne. The new improved Queen Anne of today continues the leadership so established.
